THE TIMES More readers, younger readers

Readership of The Times is continuing to expand and the paper is the most costeffective national daily newspaper for reaching young, successful adults. This is disclosed by official National Readership Survey figures issued today for the period October 1985 to March 1986. Total readership of the paper is rising too, with a present figure of 1,300,000 readers a 38,000 increase on the same period last year.

A greater percentage of readers than those of any other national paper -61 per cent — is from the AB socio-economic group. This group includes those men and women occupying the senior positions in their professions, industries and businesses.

 Readership among ABC is under 45 has grown by 12.2 per cent to 844,000 - 65 per cent of Times readers are now under the age of 45. (The Daily Telegraph's equivalent figure is 43 per cent.) Times readers are among the best-

The President's comments vere included in a message he sent to the International Phyicians for the Prevention of Nuclear War congress in Cologue. But many senior dele-gates at the meeting were disappointed by the tone of the message, which contrasted sharply with greetings sent to the congress by Mr Gorbachov.

President Reagan said he had sought to accelerate negotiations on the reduction of the two superpowers' nuclear arsenals since November. We have serious proposals on the table. In Start (Strategic Arms Reductions Talks) we have proposed a 50 per cent reduction in strategic nuclear weapons, appropriately applied.

"We have also proposed a realistic schedule for the global elimination of United States and Soviet longer-range INF (Intermediate-range Nuclear Forces), missiles. In the defence and space talks we have proposed an open-laboratories initiative designed to build confidence on both sides that the respective research is not offensive in nature."

The United States had put forth proposals for a compre-

Professor John Kenneth Galbraith of Harvard University told the congress that arms negotiations between the superpowers had become "a disastrous charade"

The military establishment in both countries had become an independent force which exploited conflict and tension he said. The arms control negotiations are not meant to limit and reduce the threat of nuclear devastation. They are now a design for quieting public fear of nuclear war.

Mr Alan Herd, Mr

Mr Herd would not specify vhat action was contemplated but it is possible that Mr Botham could claim restraint of trade since he will lose at least £7,500 in appearance fees by missing all three Tests against India, two one-day Texaco internationals and one Test against New Zealand.

In addition he will be unable to play in nine county games for Somerset A five-man appeals committee would consist of an independent chairman, a representative from the players' and should be replaced by a single fused profession of lawyers, the Young Solicitors' Group says in a paper published yesterday.

The group is the latest to support a radical reform of the profession and an end to the restrictive practices which distinguish solicitors from barr-

In a strong attack on the present system, the group says that it is a legacy of the days of a much smaller Bar which could be regarded as a separate body of specialist advocates or

But that distinction no longer applies. Although the Bar includes specialist advocates. there are many whose advocacy is found wanting".

The paper adds: "Moreover specialist advocates are not exclusively members of the Bar. There is a considerable body of solicitor advocates and their number is inc-

It says that over the years the functions of the two branches have converged: often barristers are no less generalist than their solicitor counterparts and solicitors are becoming more and more

Given the numbers now qualifying as solicitors and barristers, and given their converging functions, the present system is a nonsense."

The group's proposals are far more radical than those in the consultative paper pro-duced last autumn by a Law Society committee, which stopped short of fusion and advocated the retention of a separate specialist Bar, although significantly smaller

But the young solicitors' paper says that although consultants - specialist laywers who would mostly be briefed by other lawyers - would still be needed, it sees no justification for a separate Bar.

That would be pointless, it says, if all lawyers have common rights of audience in all the courts and the public have direct access to all lawyers, including the consultants.

A two-branch legal profession is artificial and outmoded articles, consisting of a oneyear post-degree course and two years practical

As well as direct access by the public to all lawyers, there would be unrestricted rights of audience to all courts, only to be limited to certain courts in the first three years after qualifying.

All judicial appointments should also be open to all lawyers, and a system for accrediting specialists should be introduced. Fusion is opposed by the Lord Chancellor, the Bar and was also opposed by the Royal Commission on Legal Ser-vices in 1979 which said it was not in the public interest and would jeopardize the quality both of advocacy and future

But the paper says it rejects the views of the Government. the Lord Chancellor and the Bar and urges a reassessment of the Royal Commission's easons which it says are "not persuasive".

One effect of the present restrictions is that 44,000 lawyers are prevented from appearing in the higher courts, the paper says. The potential advantage to the public if even a fraction of this number were to avail themselves of extended rights is self-evident.

The paper accepts that one result of its proposals would be large businesses going direct to a consultant and not through another lawyer as

Also, large firms of solici-tors would be able to attract and retain consultants. But the best consultants would form their own practices, and similarly there would be firms of advocates as well as sole practitioner advocates, it says.

It was the Young Solicitors who first put forward radical proposals for reform of the profession in 1972. But at that time these attracted little

Since then, there have been "dramatic changes in the size of the profession, the economic climate and the political It calls for a common climate" it says, and it is time education and training for all to review those proposals.

Mr Heseltine, visiting the east London development area he created when he was Secretary of State for the Environment, warned Government not to spend all its extra cash on tax cuts.

There was nothing unique he said, about the east end of London in terms of its massive urban dereliction, but the experience of the London Docklands Development Corporation proved that tech-nique of rebuilding prosperity in inner citiesworked.

He gave a warning on the vicious circle of decline and said a nationwide urban development corporation was a matter of priority.

An all-party group of MPs is planning a thorough investigation of Britain's nuclear indus Chemobyl disaster.

The inquiry, by the Commons select committee on energy, comes after feuding between it and the scient committee on the environment, which conducted an 11month investigation into the industry.

MPs on the energy committee will spend two days at the Schlafield reprocessing plant in Cumbria next month. They also hope to look into the implications of the Governnent's decision on the plan to build a second nuclear power station at Sizewell, in Suffolk expected soon.

Some members were dismayed by the environment committee's highly critical re-port which described Britain's nuclear waste sites as "primitive in the extreme" criticized the "defensive ecretiveness" in the stucker What was looked for was a fast jet pilot with about 1200-1500 hours of flying experience, which meant he was probably about 28, had the rank ndustry.

The new inquiry will coincide with the special safety check being carried out at Schafield by the Nuclear Inordered by the Health and Safety Executive after an out-cry over leaks from the plant and is seen as an attempt to restore public confidence. In-spectors finished examining the site this week and their report is expected to be made public in the autumn.

A MORI opinion poll commissioned by The Times shows that 33 per cent of the population would favour a ban now on tobacco firms sponsoring any sporting event, and a further 11 percent would back a ban on tobacco-sponsored sport on television.

The total of 44 per cent favoured a ban on televising tobacco-sponsored sport, compared with previous polls carried out between 1975 and 1981, in which support for a ban on cigarette companies sponsoring any sporting event fluctuated between 24 and

Public opinion appears to Council insists it does not. But the British Medical Association and anti-smoking pres-sure groups argue that tobacco sponsorship of sport gets through to children.

A government-sponsored survey in Northern Ireland showed that 75 per cent of 11 to 15-year-olds believed they had seen cigarette advertising on television, in spite of the fact that it has been banned for 20 years, and studies suggest 46 per cent of 7 to 15-year-olds watched last year's Em-bassy snooker final.

Figures in the poll for The Times suggest that support for a ban on televised sports sponsorship by tobacco firms rises the more people believe children are influenced to smoke by such sponsorship.

Only 27 per cent of those polled believed tobacco sponsorship of sport on television did not influence children to smoke. Women in personal tax plea By Amanda Haigh

Parliamentary Staff

Women are three to one in favour of the Government's preposals for a fully transferable personal tax allowance between spouses, according to mittal results of a survey carried out by Miss Emma Nicholson, vice-chairman of the Conservative Party.

The women prefer the pro-posal in the Government's Green Paper, that either party to a marriage would have an allowance which he or she could transfer to the other if he or she did not have enough income to make full use of it, to a system where everybody has the same level of allowance. There is dissatisfaction with the present system where a husband has a tax-free allowance of one-and-a-half times the single person's allowance, couples where the wife has a paid job have two-and-a-half times the single allowance, but married women who do not have earned income have no allowance of their own.

Miss Nicholson, whose survey will canvass more than 50.000 opinions and be submitted to the Treasury, said: "I am extremely pleased because I believe strongly that women should be treated impartially by the tax system and not penalized as married women are by the present

Improvements on land 'better for consumers than farmers'

By John Young, Agriculture Correspondent

Consumers, rather than of visitors is an indication of farmers, have been the main how much the present appearlong-term beneficiaries of ag-ricultural research and development, a report published Substantial increases in productivity, achieved by new technology, have not brought lasting reward to the average farmer in recent years, the report by the Centre for Agricultural Strategy at Reading University says.

Some farmers, especially those who owned or inherited their farms before or soon after the Second World War, have prospered, sometimes becoming millionaires. But others have done worse than hired employees and many now have heavy debt burdens.

The report says that in recent years public attention has been focused on the costs of supporting agriculture and disposing of surplus production.

There is a common belief that farmers are over-rewarded for their efforts, but the indications are that incomes have been squeezed between higher input costs and lower market prices, it says. The most criticized change in the appearance of the landscape have taken place in fairly restricted areas, the Overall more food can be produced than is needed to feed the population, and supply can be considered well secured, apart from vulnera-bility to nuclear attack.

The report points to the importance of agriculture in the national economy, not least as an employer.

Much has been made of the decline in the workforce, but although it represents only 2.3 per cent nationally, the proportion of the population directly employed in agriculture rises to 9.2 per cent in Cornwall; 10.6 per cent in Lincolnshire; more than 10 per cent in the Scottish borders and in Dumfries and Galloway; 15 per cent in Dyfed; 22.5 per cent in Powys; 21.5 per cent in Co Tyrone

More sponsors for Scottish arts

Business sponsorship of the arts in Scotland rose by 30 per cent last year with more than 200 companies contributing £1.7 million towards artistic endeavour north of the border. A survey published yester-day by the Scottish Arts Council showed that sponsorship from oil companies in-creased from £179,000 to £323,000. Distillers and brewers increased their contribu-tion from £47,000 to £124,000.

Mr Timothy Mason, director of the council, said the survey was based on organizations receiving subsidy from SAC. If the full range of arts organizations in Scotland was included the total would be considerably higher.

Part of the success is due to the Business Sponsorship Incentive Scheme under which companies making sponsor-ship for the first time were matched pound for pound by the Government. The fact that arts sponsorship was tax deductable also belped. Mr Mason said sponsorship had to be kept in perspective. "With approximately £40 mil-

Salt decision brings feuds to a head

Arms control has always been the most contentious issue in the Reagan Adminis-tration. The bitter personal feuds and public fights between hawks and doves, ideologues and pragmatists, have led to a series of zigzags in policy, confusing opponents and Nato allies alike.

Pressure to protect Falklands

fisheries By Nicholas Ashford Diplomatic Correspondent

Britain is coming under renewed pressure to impose unilateral fisheries protection measures around the Falkland Islands following the sinking of a Taiwanese fishing vessel by an Argentinian gumboat.

Sir Rex Hunt, the former civil commissioner of the islands, said Britain should declare a 200-mile fishery protection zone around the

"Because there is no restriction on fishing around the Falklands, it has become the last great fishing free-for-all in the world, and the fear is that the fish stocks are going to be destroyed," he said. "Before 1982 there were about 30 boats a day operating in the area. Now it's more like 300."

Fishing experts have said the islanders could be earning about £12 million a year from controlled fishing.

The British Government has turned a deaf ear to the islanders' pleas, saying it would be impossible to police a fisheries protection zone. Instead, Britain has been pressing for the establishment of a multi-lateral fishing regime in the South Atlantic, to be arranged through the Rome-based Food and Agriculture Organization and policed by the countries whose vessels are fishing in the area.

However, the FAO report on the impact that the current level of fishing is having on fish stocks is still being awaited by Whitehall. • BUENOS AIRES: The Ar-

There is no need to investigate whether politicians were involved in helping to cover up the way two Palestinians died while in the custody of Shin Bet, the Israeli counterintelligence agency, according to Mr Yitzhak Zamir, the Attorney-General.

But Mr Zamir is still insisting on a full inquiry into the circumstances in which the men died in April 1984. He now has evidence, he says, which suggests that they were murdered on the orders of the head of Shin Bet, Mr Avraham Shalom, who had then fabricated evidence to

After a day of confusion over Belgium's request for the extradition of Liverpool football rioters to face charges arising from the Heysel Stadium tragedy a year ago, the Justice Ministry yesterday confirmed that the request would reach Britain "in a matter of days."

Twenty six alleged culmits have been identified following the close examination of photographs and video film. If extradited they will be charged with the Belgian equivalent of mauslaughter. Thirty-nine people died in the disaster.

The confusion arose when a statement by M Jean Gol, the Belgian Minister of Justice, to a visiting television reporter was misinterpreted to mean that the extradition warrants were already in British hands.

Last mouth M Charles Fer-dinand Nothomb, the Belgian Interior Minister, told Mr Douglas Hurd, the Home Secretary, that Belgium intended to ask for extradition. Mr Hurd assured him that Britain would co-operate fully.

Tamil rebels blamed for 26 deaths in Sri Lanka bomb blasts

Clive of Australia?

Clive Lloyd, that great and genuinely enormous West Indian cricketer, could be joining the Australians as coach or manager of the national team. There had been speculation, and indeed, promises, that he would take up a similar job for the West Indians but nothing has happened. Indeed, Wes Hall, their touring manager, has said that Lloyd would not be up to the job.

So, why did Lloyd give up the captaincy of the West Indies. It was because of increasing dissension in the West Indian dressingroom. Things had reached the stage where Lloyd doubted that most of the leading players would give of their best under him. His troops, ambitious and anxious, were getting increasingly restive as speculation about his successor grew. Along with Richards, the current captain, Holding and Gomes were considered strong candidates for the job.

People have also wondered why Lloyd has not become Sir Clive. Does this represent royal disapproval of Lloyd's speed-and-more-speed tactics? Not at all. Guyanese nationals are actively discouraged from accepting such honours. One assumes that Her Maiesty would not offer a knighthood knowing that it would almost certainly be refused.

Lloyd's list

Meanwhile, Mike Brearley, the former England captain, is probably not on Lloyd's Christmas card list. Clive was more than upset by Brearley's criticisms of him in his book The Art of Captaincy, in which he wrote of Lloyd becoming "cynical in the exercise of power". This was "a futile attempt to discredit me", Lloyd replies, among other revela-tions in Trevor McDonald's updated and newly paperbacked book Clive Lloyd.

Joint effort

The best sports books title of the year is certain to belong to Frank Keating's book on Ian Botham, soon to be published. It is called High, Wide and Handsome, a pleasant follow-up to the West Country car stickers that read Somerset do it on grass".

● This year's Derby, run on Wednesday, is a puzzler. No single horse stands out. But after profound meditation, I am going for a Michael Stoute 1-2: Shahrastani to win and Jareer each way. Bookies, you have been warned. Punt to point

Ian Bathgate plans to be the first racing punt from Lechlade to Teddington. These craft are 34 feet long, less than a foot wide, and a man can carry one under his arm quite comfortably. The ordinary picnic punts - tricky enough to handle, in all conscience - are a chunky three feet wide. Bathgate's efforts are part of the ambitions of Ditton's Skiff and Punting Club to navigate the Thames in racing punts in September. Most will be in "two-foot" punts, which take two men and are two feet wide.

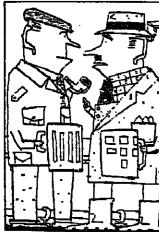

Wizards of Oz

No one, no matter how hard he tried, could forget the Australian cricketing soap opera Bodyline, that glorious celebration of what has long been recognized as the longest whinge in sporting history. Hot on its heels comes a new soap opera, to celebrate what threatens to become history's longest piece of unseemly crowing: the Australian victory in the America's Cup. The show is called The Challenge and is billed as "how the boys from Down Under came out on top". We should have it on our screens in the autumn. Lucky us.

Tossing the cash How much does it cost to bag the Olympic Games? The quick answer is, a fortune. The cities bidding for the 1992 Olympics will be spending a total of £31.5 million on self-publicity: for the summer games, Amsterdam and Birmingham will each spend £2.5 million, Brisbane £4 million, Paris £5.5 million and Barcelona £6 million. For the winter games, Sofia will spend £1 million, Cortina £1.5 million, Lillehammer £1.5 million, Albertville £3 million and Fallun £4 million. Amsterdam has sent a telex to all competing cities, suggesting an agreement on expenditure and conduct of lobbying. Birmingham at least has agreed to this. Only the two cities that come out on top

Tom Paulin: why art must reflect contemporary concerns

The politics of poetry

We have been taught, many of us. to believe that art and politics are separated by the thickest and most enduring of partitions. Art is a garden of pure perfect forms which effortlessly "transcends" that world of compromise, cruelty, dead language and junk cars which Manicheans dismiss as mere politics. Art stands for freedom, while politics is a degrading bondage we must reject and escape from. Indeed there is an influential school of literary criticism appropriately, it dominates literary studies in the United States which argues that the political and historical content of literature must be dismissed as "extrinsic

irrelevance". The practitioner of close reading agrees with Henry Ford that history is bunk and enforces that belief with a series of fallacies biographical, intentional, historical. "personalist", ideological. Like intimidating heresies, these supposedly fallacious ways of reading literature are designed to hinder the reader who believes that there is often a relationship between art and politics, rather than a clear-cut opposition between formal garden and contingent scrapheap.

The poet who elects to write about political reality is no different from the poet who chooses love, landscape or a painting by Cézanne as the subject for a poem. The choice of a political subject entails no necessary or complete commitment to an ideology — Burns, for example, was a radical republican but he nevertheless based Charlie He's My Darling on popular Jacobite songs about the Young Pretender. He could combine a dedicated egalitarianism with a pride in the House of Stuart that was both personal and na-tional. And if Burns had been more extensively cavalier in his sympathies. Arnold might not have dismissed him as a "Scotch" provincial who speaks in a bogus voice, lacks high seriousness and has mistakenly elected to write about a "harsh, a sordid, a repulsive world".

Burns is one of the most notable victims of the aristocratic, hierarchical, conservative tradition which Arnold and T.S. Eliot have floated as the major cultural although Eliot offered a strategic defence of Burns's verse, his subversion of Milton's reputation was a major act of cultural desecration (the subsequent modification in Eliot's attitude did not repair the damage).

Both Arnold and Eliot adopt a romantic, curiously puritan and personal attitude to Milton -Arnold criticizes his "asperity and acerbity, his want of sweetness of temper", while Eliot confesses "an antipathy towards Milton the

Arnold: proponent of a hierarchical approach

Scrutiny group, the New Critics C.S. Lewis, Eliot was able to rewrite English literary history and almost obliterate the Protestant prophetic tradition. And as David Norbrook has pointed out in his brilliant, pioneering study, Poetry and Politics in the English Renaissance, the Renaissance poetic tradition culminated in Milton, a figure whose uncompromising republicanism places his views even today outside framework of political discussion in England. Eliot and Leavis did not flinch from a drastic solution. Miles mouth a drastic solution. solution: Milton must be declared to have been a bad poet, and 'dislocked" from the canon.

As Norbrook reminds those of us who still revere Milton as the greatest English poet and the most dedicated servant of English liberty, some of the major Renaissance poets were politicians. But this unsettling historical fact was pushed out of the cultural memory by a group of literary critics dedicated to a 'transcendental' vision which ostensibly depoliticized art.

This orthodoxy has meant that students of English literature have for several generations now been encouraged to believe that Milton's theology is entirely separate from whatever his political beliefs might have happened to be. And in any case, Milton has been smeared by T.S. Eliot as a master of "a dead language" and was therefore a writer who might be respectably avoided.

The ghost of an earlier entryiste, Edmund Burke, must have smiled at Eliot's enterprise, and Arnold's eccentric praise of that Irish counter-revolutionary as "our greatest English prose-writer" is committed critical judgements, even though Arnold astutely balances it with a criticism of Burke"s stylistic extravagance and 'Asiatic" provinciality.

Together, Arnold and Eliot ensured that the magic of monarchy and superstition permeated English literary criticism and education like a syrupy drug. Fortunately, the work of Chris-tophe Hill challenges the bland, unhistorical, insidiously tendentious readings of Milton which have been dominant until recently, and in time it may be generally acknowledged that Milton is no more a non-political writer than Joyce was - or Dante, or Virgil.

One of the dogmas of the ahistorical school of literary criticism is the belief that political commitment necessarily damages a poem. Thus poets tend to be praised for their liberal openmindedness, their freedom from the constricting dictates of ideology. As Douglas Bush has shown, Cleanth Brooks transforms Marvell's Horation Ode into an expression of modern "uncommitted" liberalism. Yet the two greatest political poems in English - Paradise Lost and Absalom and Achitophel - are works of the committed imagination. Milton was a republican, a regicide, the official propagandist of the English parliament. Dryden became a monarchist and a Tory after the Restoration. Their political beliefs are fundamental to their poems and our reading is enriched by a knowledge of those beliefs and an understanding of the social experience which helped to form them (I say "helped" because in the end we accede to a political position by an act of faith -Milton's essential faith was love of liberty, Dryden's love of order).

In the Western democracies it is still possible for many readers, students and teachers of literature to share the view that poems exist in a timeless vacuum or a soundproof museum, and that poets are gifted with an ability to hold themselves above history, rather like skylarks or weather satellites. However, in some societies, particularly totalitarian ones, history is a more or less inescapable societies a liberal belief in the separation of the public from the private life is not possible. Nor is it possible to believe that a poet may permit himself only an occasional interest in politics, or adopt a position which in the West would be termed "purely aesthetic and non-political".

The ironic gravity and absence of hope in poets such as Zbigniew Herbert, Rozewicz, Holub, remind us that in Eastern Europe the poet has a responsibility both to art and to society, and that this responsibility is single and in-divisible. The poet, in Joyce's special use of the term, is the conscience" of his or her society. Although the imagination can be strenthened rather than distorted by ideology, my definition of a political poem does not assum

Eliot: a rewriting of literary history

that such poems necessarily make an ideological statement. They can instead embody a general historical awareness rather than offering specific attitude to state affairs. Almost invariably a political poem is a public poem, and it often begins in a direct response to a current event, just as a pamphlet or a piece of journalism brings from and addresses a particular historical moment. This is true of Dryden's Absalom and Achitophel, Yeats's Easter 1916 and Auden's Spain. Unfortunately for several generations now, critics and teachers have for the most part been content to stress the "universal" or "timeless" idea of the poem and to blot out the living social moment of its production. Just as the opening night of a play's first production is a vital part of that play's meaning, so the moment when a poem first became a social object is essential to our understanding of its significance. That moment of production, like lan-guage itself, is fluent and needs to be seized by the reader's historical imagination. It is my hope that future generations will break through the barriers which have been set up between history and art. A culture which abolishes memory from the interpretation of literary texts is surely doomed.

Thatcherism's crash landing

Throughout her career Mrs Thatcher has been widely regarded as domineering and dictatorial. In the public eye, the Westland affair confirmed it. In fact it was her anxiety not to be too autocratic which caused her government its greatest trouble. Interviewed on television soon after Leon Brittan resigned as Trade and Industry Secretary, the Prime Minister was asked why she had not disciplined Michael Heseltine much earlier - if necessary, dismissing him. She had not done so, she said, because everyone would have accused her of being a bossy-boots"

According to Magnus Linklater and David Leigh, authors of the first book on the affair (Not With Honour, Sphere, £3.95), on December 18 she had discussed with a group of close advisers the possibility of issuing an ul-timatum to Heseltine. She ac-cepted the advice of Bernard Ingham, her press secretary, that she should not. The crisis deepened and dragged on.

Instead of weighing in, Mrs
Thatcher skirted round. She did not order Heseltine to obey but ensured that other departments did not co-operate with him. She did not openly support Westland linking with Sikorsky but did take care that Sir John Cuckney, the Westland chairman and a supporter of Sikorsky, was better informed than his opponents.

Her office caused the Solicitor-General's letter about "material inaccuracies" in a letter of Heseltine's to be leaked, but it was Brittan, not the Prime Minister or any of her officials, who paid for the impropriety. Mrs Thatcher is famous for being blunt. Throughout this crisis she was evasive.

As the authors delight in pointing out, the Westland story is discreditable to the government. It revealed seediness, dishonesty, confusion and panic. But the book does not really explain why mat-ters came to such a pass. Why did a government allegedly as vig-orously directed as Mrs Thatcher's stumble over something so trivial?

Perhaps the answer lies partly in the triviality. In the context of the major issues of industrial policy, Westland was peripheral. Even in defence policy it was not very important. There was no reason why senior politicians should pay much attention to it. When Heseltine threw himself into the subject his colleagues were bewildered.

From an initial agnosticism about the sale. Heseltine moved to passionate partisanship. As he leaked and threatened and caused letters to be written, as he suddenly jumped up at a Cabinet meeting and said that he was and again on television and claimed that "an issue of fundamental constitutional principle" was at stake, people found it difficult to understand what was driving him. And when he rose in the Commons debate after resigning and supported the government, forgetting the fundamental constitutional issue", bewilderment turned to derision. In a story in which classics of personality are very important. Heseltine's character may be the central factor. His mixture of ambition and recklessness must have been impossible to deal with. It went far beyond the ordinary desire of a cabinet minister to advance himself. When Mrs Thatsher said "It was a kind of period we hope never to go through again, when one member of a team isn't quite working as a member of a team", she was understating the truth.

Disagreements with colleagues notoriously make everyone be-have much more foolishly than attacks from avowed opponents. If a minister as senior as Heseltine asked for trouble he was bound to get it, because he was putting an unexpected strain on the government. Mrs Thatcher's response revealed the limitations of her political skills and the impurity of some of her methods.

The most depressing aspect of the tale is the light it throws on modern politics as they affect industry, particularly military industry. The authors rightly point out that it was disingenuous of the government to talk of Westland having a free choice in the light of "market forces" when it was itself applying political and commercial

Westland was used in tawdry arguments about patriotism and as a means of furthering or countering anti-Americanism. Heseltine made it the occasion for his agreement with the armaments directors of Britain, France, West Germany and Italy on a new European helicopter policy. Prestige, diplomacy, votes - every-thing mattered except, it seems, whether Westland could be a wellrun, profitzble enterorise.

The world of Westland is one in which Mrs Thatcher puts a huge diplomatic effort into selling the utterly unsuitable Westland W 30 helicopter to India. (The government has already lost £40 million in a "loan" to Westland to build the W 30s.) This inane process is called "batting for Britain". West-land provides a classic Thatcherite critique of interventionist policies, but here it was the Thatcher gov-ernment that did the intervening. The author is editor of The

After church, Mark Twain congratulated Dr Doane, later Bishop of Albany, on an enjoyable sermon: "I welcomed it as an old friend; I have a book at home containing every word of it". Dr Doane bridled: "I am sure you have not". Twain: "Indeed I have". Doane: "Well, I'd like to have a look at it. Send it over, please". The next day Twain sent him his set of the Oxford English

We are celebrating a landmark in the life of our dictionary. It was not the first on historical principles, the brothers Grimm started the Deutsches Worterbuch a bit earlier. But the OED is one of the few to have reached the letter Z: and it has just become the only one with a complete Supplement for this century.
It is the greatest dictionary of any modern language. This is partly because of the size, hospitality and putty-like plasticity of the English vocabulary; and partly because of the quality and diversity of English literature. The OED also owes a lot to the virtues of the remarkable men who have edited it, from Sir James Murray to Dr Robert Burchfield, neither of them, significantly, an English-man, and neither in sympathy with the contemporary academic fashions of English faculties. Both were caught in the web of words for most of their lives. But, unlike other lexicographers, both man-aged to spin the web into order vithout becoming tied down like Gulliver.

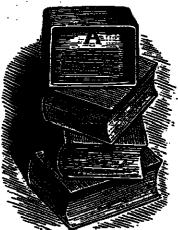

The Supplement is not just a landmark, but also a turning point. It is the last great book to be set in type by hot metal. Tomorrow to the flickering green screen and computerization, which is revolutionizing dictionaries as well as newspapers. IBM machines and programmers are al-ready integrating the 6,000 pages of the Supplement into the 21,000 pages of the parent OED, a task to tax the most sophisticated soft-ware. They will now be able to revise the original entries, either in alphabetical order, or treating first the sensitive entries, such as those reflecting Victorian attitudes to savages and slavery; and cricket, metamorphosed by Packer,

The new technology of print has vastly increased the speed and size of dictionary-making. Earlier this year the French started to talk about cohabitation in 2 new political sense. The new meaning was in the Oxford data-base by the end of the week. The vocabulary of a widely diffused and highly cultivated living language is not a fixed quantity circumscribed by definite limits. Dr Murray spoke of Lexicon totius Anglicitatis. But in practice his notion of a Lexicon of All English was Utopian. Both he and Dr Burchfield had to set boundaries if they were to finish the job, and produce something of publishable size.

The new technology has changed all that. The English language is like an accordion. stretchable to the limits of an editor's arms and assiduity. The computerized data-base is produc-ing an accordion stretchable to the those who pay for access will be able to buy this colossal word store on CD-ROMs (Compact Disc Read-Only Memories, for those

Shall we include proper names
as well as other words in our dictionary, so that, for example, under Dallas we can look up the city in Texas, the soppy soap opera, and any worthies named Dallas in fact or fiction? Or shall we keep proper names and other words separately? High tech means we can do both. Shall we think again about recording oral English? Ninety-nine per cent of English is spoken, not written.

The OED has taken the view that as soon as a new word is spoken, somebody writes it down somewhere. Tapes and floppy discs enable us to record the word exactly as it is spoken, so making possible a dictionary organized on synchronic as well as historical principles. Afrikanerdom united: the inauguration of the Voortrekker Monument in 1949 Full circle for the laager

Michael Hornsby finds a parallel to the anti-Botha backlash

brawls of the 1930s, now piously

The historical parallels do not end there. The AWB bears a striking resemblance to the Ossewabrandwag (OB) -- in English, ox-wagon fire guard — a para-military organization formed in early 1939 which became the main focus for Afrikaner opposition to South Africa's entry into the Second World War on Britain's side, a decision that caused even more turmoil within the "volk" than the present government's policies.

Then the cabinet split down the middle. Hertzog, the prime min-ister, and Smuts, his deputy, took opposing sides. Hertzog's motion in favour of neutrality was put to parliament and narrowly defeated. The English-speaking governorgeneral, Patrick Duncan, refused Hertzog's request to dissolve the assembly and hold elections. Instead, he asked Smuts to form a government, and Hertzog re-

About one in three Afrikaners of military age volunteered to fight alongside their English-speaking compatriots. Many more joined the OB, which at the height of its popularity claimed some 400,000 members. Much given to Nazistyle parades and torchlight railies, the OB also had a stormtrooper unit which tried to sabotage the

ity pylons and railway tracks.

Membership of the OB and the NP overlapped. Botha briefly belonged to the OB until his mentor, Dr Malan, fearing that it might usurp the position of the NP, issued an edict prohibiting dual membership. Some Afri-kaners, including John Vorster, later to be Botha's predecessor as prime minister, refused to leave the OB, and were interned by the government

Saturday night brawls between gangs of OB supporters and soldiers became a routine feature of South African life. Then, as now, the loyalty of the police was suspect. A commission of inquiry set up after one particularly savage punch-up in Johannesburg, which lasted for two days, found that policemen had joined in with a will, kicking and batoning soldiers as they lay on the ground.

As the tide of war turned against Hitler, support for the OB rapidly waned. The organization was never banned, however, and long after the NP came to power in 1948, Afrikaners continued to view the OB's exploits in a heroic light, even as they denounced the "terrorism" of the emerging breed of black nationalist rebels who adopted much the same techniques of sabotage in pursuit of their own idea of liberation. General Smuts's chief crime, in damentalists, was not that he was too kind to blacks (his views on that subject were only mildly more liberal than those of Dr Malan), but rather that he had thrown in his lot with the Boers' ancestral enemy, the English. The tortured relationship between "Boer and Brit" was still the dominant theme of South African politics. Blacks, and their political demands, were the eyes of Afrikaner fun-

Today, President Botha faces exactly the reverse situation. Most whites, even most Afrikaners, know that the atavistic antics of TerreBlanche and his followers represent the last thrashings of a near-extinct dinosaur and not the dawn of a brave new world. If the Afrikaner right has an influence out of all proportion to its numbers, it is largely because Botha is still a (parily willing) prisoner of the notion that his chief duty as an Afrikaner leader is to preserve the unity of the tribe.

The demographic reality is that even if half the Afrikaner community deserted the NP, the government could still hope to command the support of a majority of the white electorate by increasing its following among English-speakers or even entering into coalition with the liberal Progressive Federal Party to its left.

That, however, is a quantum leap that President Botha seems emotionally unable to make, despite the courage he showed in shrugging off the defection of the Treurnicht faction, and the consequent formation of the Conservative Party, in 1982. He still shrinks from the wholesale sacrifice of Afrikaner solidarity that would probably be involved in entering into negotiations with the African National Congress.

NAVAL MANOEUVRES

The long-running naval engagement between the short fat warship and the long thin one seems to be entering its final phase - for at least the second time in three years. Seldom do issues of naval procurement so grip the imagination of the press - or provoke so much bitterness in Whitehall. It has rumbled on and off for most of this decade and has antecedents stretching back ten years and more Against this background, the Prime Minister's decision to set up an independent inquiry, following the latest salvo from the short fat warship's guns, is unusual but unquestionably right.

The few facts which are uncontested are simple enough. Three years ago the Ministry of Defence decided on a long and narrow traditional design for the Royal Navy's new Type-23 frigate, despite vigorous opposition from a radical outside alternative. This was the S-90, a shorter, broader-beamed competitor from the Isle of Wight company Thornycroft Giles. The claims made by the company that its brainchild could out-gun and out-perform the official candidate. were rejected by the ministry in 1983. And that, it seemed, was that.

The decision to reopen the argument, which has never been entirely stilled, was taken because of this week's report by an unofficial committee under the leadership of Admiral of the Fleet Lord Hill-Norton — a former chief of the defence staff and one-time chairman of Nato's Military Committee. His committee concluded not only that the S-90 design offered significant advantages in terms of seakeeping, speed, weapon-siting and living space, but that it could also be built more quickly and more cheaply. Its estimated price of £73m was 25 per cent lower than the £100m cost (at least) of conventional Type-23s, the first of which is now under construction on the Clyde. The committee has also claimed that some underlying technical information was inaccurate.

It is not the first time that aspersions have been cast on the decison-making process over the Type-23 design. This newspaper has previously reported an allegation that the results of a successful series of tests carried out for Thornycroft Giles by, among others, the National Maritime Institute were rejected out of hand by the ministry. Another report has even referred to bugging devices' being found' and removed before a luncheon meeting of the S-90 lobby at Brooks club in St.

James's Now, it is extremely difficult for people outside the specialised area of marine engineering to make a judgement upon such an issue. Comparisons of seakeeping performance and cruising speed demand special expertise. The Hill-Norton committee contains a number of highly successful men, including Lord Strathcona, a former minister of state at the Ministry of Defence, Professor R.V.Jones the Second World War scientist, and Dr. Richard Garwin, the eminent American defence physicist and strategic analyst. But even they would probably lack specialised knowledge on the central issues. They are distinguished enough, however, and their report is detailed enough, to underline doubts which have continued to surround the Type-23 controversy. The cost factor alone, if correct, is enough to give pause for thought at a time when the defence budget is coming under particularly heavy pressure. The Type-23 was, after all, conceived as a relatively inexpensive frigate.

The Royal Navv is concerned by the prospect of time. But the Government has reopening the argument if only a duty to make sure.

because it might set back its shipbuilding programme. The Royal Corps of Naval Constructors, based at Bath, who have dominated British warship design since before the First World War, apparently remain convinced that the claims for the S-90 are based on false premisses and miscalculation. Perhaps they are right. But the argument has continued for so long, and has recently grown so intense, that the RCNC themselves would surely benefit from an inquiry to settle it once and for all.

But who is to conduct it? As all the country's naval architects seem to be divided on the issue, and as few people outside their chosen speciality can understand the technicalities, the pool of available names must be considered very small. A marine engineer is understood to have been approached, with a view to his producing a report before the end of this year. It is arguable, however, that Whitehall should have endorsed the Hill-Norton committee's recommendation of a high court judge to conduct the inquiry, with one or two technical experts to advise him.

It is significant that the main purpose of the inquiry will be to examine the way in which the 1983 decision was reached. Amid all the claims and counter claims, this has become the central issue in this uneasy affair. At the same time, one should not forget that the original objective was to design the most cost-effective warship possible for the navy. If the inquiry finds serious faults in the decisionmaking, the navy should be prepared to re-examine the options for its fleet of surface escorts. This country has a sorry reputation for wasting its inventive genius by bureaucratic ineptitude and lack of official imagination. This is not necessarily the case this

LISTEN TO THE HEADS

Many voluntary organizations present a less alluring face when they gather for annual conference. The recent Police Education is different. Federation conference is an example: did the angry form It has a mixed parentage, speeches in the hall really reflect the views of the constable on the beat? A parallel question can be asked of the National Association of Head Teachers meeting in Wales this week.

Heads cannot afford irresponsibility. They, not the teachers nor education officers nor governors, have to decide to keep schools open and to look after the children when there is no lunchtime cover. The jarring language of extremism, occasionally heard this week, does not suit them. The NAHT is a voice which both parents and politicians ought to listen to.

The message it delivered concerned salaries for teachers and the new 16-plus examination. Teachers' pay cannot be shelved, but, as long as talks between councils and teachers' leaders are taking place under the auspices of Acas, there is

But in the last few months the examination has been the subject of a rhetorical war. The speech makers - teachers' representatives for the most part - who have made threats, must be called irresponsible. They have sown doubt in the minds of parents whether September will see the examination up and running.

The GCSE is a candidate for speedy action of the kind needed if the Government is to accomplish two ends. One of these is the ambition to be seen by the public to be ameliorating public services.

The other matters more. It is to restore to classrooms. school common rooms, and local authority offices, not just a sense of common purpose but vitality as well. It is difficult to resist the conclusion of the headteachers that such new spirit will have to be purchased with extra public money.

It is reported that the National Front has been writing to members of the Militant Tendency in Liverpool, urging them to abandon their present political allegiance and cleave to the NF instead. And there is method - not much, but some - in their apparent madness: the NF has been pointing out, it seems, that both groups draw their main support from the same areas of the working class, and that both oppose the sinister and brutal activities of the capitalists. If any Militant, therefore, has become disillusioned with his leaders (and it has to be said that Mr Derek Hatton does wear some suspiciously capitalist suits), there will be a welcome waiting for him at the rival shop as soon as he has crossed the road. Those who think that the Militant Tendency and the National Front would always be uneasy bedfellows should understand that once a man has sufficiently parted company with reason to embrace either of these curious doctrines, it will require no great leap for him to change it for the other. A man who believes that the earth is flat can more easily be persuaded that it is cylindrical than a man who obstinately continues to be-

FOURTH LEADER as often given the rest of us the Workers' Revolutionary much comfort, but there is even more to be had from the knowledge that on points of doctrine quite invisible to the rest of us they hate each other far more than those who reject them all. But the invisibility of the differences is even more remarkable than the hate: Chesterton thought it matter for wonder when he found a man who "could tell the difference between Mr Asquith and Mr Balfour, but could not tell one kind of Socialist from another kind of Socialist", and it has got a great deal worse (or, depending on which way you look at it, better) since. In his pamphlet Tracts for the Times, published in 1983, Mr Charles Elwell attempted a complete catalogue raisonné of the groups of the extremist left; he might as well have tried to take a census of the mayfly population, and his study must have been out of date before the red ink was dry on it. But those who are content to read it for its poetry rather than its political guidance can still enjoy such majestic pas-

Fresh approach to family breakdown Hard facts on

From Mr John Jillings Sir, An adversarial approach to the resolution of family disputes involves a contradiction in terms. The way in which our courts are structured still reflects a judgemental approach to marital breakdown, which can only serve to heighten the almost inevitable conflict between partners faced by the collapse of their relationship.

Is the objective to parade discord, thereby helping to entrench it? Is it not possible to help towards disengagement? Your own conclusions (leading article, May 15) seem altogether too negative.

Chief Judge Trapski recently and convincingly described the work of family courts in New Zealand. There the approach is based on the clear recognition that family breakdown is accompanied by severe and intense emotions. The objective is to ameliorate these feelings and to help the parties to reach positions in which they can live their future lives constructively. That process involves engaging the partners in a discourse aimed at working out their own solutions to their own problems, the welfare of the children being the first and para-mount consideration.

Trapski asserts that an analysis of outcomes for 1982-83 presents an encouraging picture: 19 per cent resumed their marriage despite having filed an application; 39 per cent resolved the issues without resort to the formal stage of a full court hearing; 16 per cent came before the court for formal resolution of part of the problem; 26 per cent reached no agreement, so that a judicial settlement was needed

Surely statistics of that kind suggest a long hard look at alternatives to our present framework. The interdepartmental review of family and domestic jurisdiction provides an ideal opportunity. Yours faithfully

South African raids

From Mr Lloyd N. Cutler Sir, David Watt's "Botha does a Reagan" (May 23) is somewhat off the mark. The American attacks on Tripoli and Benghazi may be open to legitimate criticism, both as to strategic wisdom and tactical choice of urban targets, but there can be no doubt of their legality

under international law.

The Government of Libya was directly responsible for a delib-erate and illegal attack on American military personnel in Berlin. The evidence of this is so convincing that the United States went so far as to compromise a valuable intelligence source in order to lay that evidence before the world. Any nation whose armed forces are attacked by another nation in violation of the UN Charter has the legal right to take a proportionate military reprisal.

Concern on salmon From the Director of the Salmon &

Trout Association
Sir, Whilst not wishing to be at odds with such an experienced observer of the salmon scene as your correspondent, Conrad Voss Bark (article, May 22), I think it is important that a distinction should be drawn between the eatches of salmon and the stocks.

Large catches do not necessarily mean a proportionately large escapement of fish to spawn. The converse might even be true, if the larger catches have resulted from more intensive, or more effective, fishing effort.

As the Hunter Committee of 1965 pointed out, ideally the counting of fish entering rivers is necessary for the proper management of this valuable resource. This is why the Salmon and Trout Association, in company with others, is calling for an end to those methods of fishing which intercept fish in the seas or around the coasts, namely drift and coastal netting.
These fisheries are cropping indiscriminately and will be taking fish from a number of different rivers, some of them far removed nurses' pay Sir, Your leader on the family courts proposals (May 15) missed From the General Secretary of the Royal College of Nursing Sir, Your leader on May 23, the point of the sentence quoted from the 1974 Finer report, and its reasoning was thereby basically

"Undeserving cases", suggests that the Government's attitude to nurses' pay is governed by senti-mental feelings and that what is needed is hard facts on recruitment and retention. It fails to recognise the demographic time bomb ticking away under nursing. The review body itself made the following comment:

... the NHS is a near monopoly employer controlling both supply and demand. In that situation the absence of general difficulties in recruitment and retention is insufficient evidence of the adequacy of pay levels.

The basic take home pay of a staff nurse, who has trained for three years, is still only £86.78 after this recent rise.

Earlier this year the Public Accounts Committee looked at nursing manpower and identified a serious threat of a nursing shortage within the next few years as the number of 18-year-olds coming out of our schools drops dramatically. This demographic time bomb will require many solutions, but one of them will undoubtedly have to be a better level of pay to persuade people to remain in nursing.

Unless the Government embarks on a systematic improve-ment of the level of nurses' pay there will be serious manpower shortages by the end of this decade. There has to be some recognition that nurses give a significant commitment to society and the majority in society would wish their Government to recognise that commitment in

What we have in nursing is not a free market, but a monopoly employer taking advantage of its position against a background of economic difficulties. But time is running out. Aiready even some of the London teaching hospitals are failing to attract sufficient students and very little is being done throughout the whole NHS to retain qualified staff.

I wonder if the pay of Times leader writers is based on the availability of people willing to do the job. If it were I suspect they would be paid about the same as a staff nurse.

Yours faithfully TREVOR CLAY, General Secretary, Royal College of Nursing, 20 Cavendish Square, W1. May 23.

Muzzled by Macaw

From Mr Guy Roberts Sir, Michael McCarthy's excellent article (May 23) on Mr Jonathan Savery's experiences with the "anti-racist" black group Macay (Multi-cultural Education Afro-Caribbean and Asian Workers' Group) in Bristol highlights the growing problems created by such organisations.

While at Leeds University, I and many other Conservatives ran into similar opposition from the prominent "anti-racist" establishment that runs the majority of our student unions. I was, for example, despite my sincere stated opposition to the apartheid regime in South Africa, loudly accused, both verbally and in print, of 'racism" for my condemnation of the violent methods employed by the African National Congress and was physically attacked at the National Union of Students conference, when I called for the ending of the controversial "no platform for racists and fascists" policy.

Is it not time for the obnoxious idea of "positive" (ie anti-white) discrimination to be abandoned once and for all in favour of true freedom of speech? I remain yours etc., GUY ROBERTS,

Use of farm subsidies From Mr T. B. Mills

Sir, Ronald Butt, in his article on Europe's common agricultural policy (May 22), questions whether any government could contemplate the demise of the smaller farmers and the transformation of the countryside into dormitory suburbs.

Unfortunately, this is exactly what has been happening, and what will continue to happen as long as the agricultural subsidies are related to the amounts of food produced, rather than to the methods of production involved.

Ronald Butt goes on to quote Sir Geoffrey Howe as saying "It is a fallacy to think that sun, soil and rain are not sufficient; that modern agriculture needs taxpayers money as well."

Undoubtedly, Sir Geoffrey has a point; excellent food can be pro-duced using sun, soil and water only (provided the organic residues are re-cycled within the system). However, few farmers can contemplate this, as the labour costs are greater and the yields are less, and business is business, as Sir Geoffrey undoubtedly knows.

Nevertheless, whilst the food mountains continue to grow and the unemployment figures continue to rise, there seems an excellent case for using the subsidy system to encourage a change in this direction. Yours faithfully.

ON THIS DAY

MAY 31 1848

Although the London demonstration in April, 1848 night be taken as the last outburst of Chartism On a national scale (On This Day April 11, 1985). social unrest was still strong enough in the north of England for the movement to make itself violently felt six weeks later.

THE CHARTISTS AND REPEALERS.

... The evil counsels of the worst of the Chartist leaders appear to have taken root amongst large classes of the operatives of the West Riding of Yorkshire, and the peace of several of the principal manufacturing towns, particularly Bradford and Bingley, has been more or less disturbed during the last few days. Owing to the depression of the worsted manu-facture, and the introduction of machinery that has superseded the use of manual labour in the process of woolcombing, much distress and suffering have for a considerable time been experienced by the manufacturing operatives. Hence they have - more perhaps in a spirit of desperation than by any well-grounded in the princip Chartism - followed the advice of the advocates of physical force, and imitated the pike and drilling preparations of the Young Ireland party in the sister country. The local authorities in the different towns of the Riding, aided by advice from the Home Office, and the assistance of the military, are fully prepared to put down any attempt which may be made upon the peace and property of the well affected ... The authorities have for som time been aware that the Chartists at Halifax, Bradford, Bingley and other towns in the Riding, were arming and enrolling themselves in clubs which they call "Life and Property Protection Societies" or 'National Guards", and that these clubs regularly assemble, both in and out of the towns, for the purpose of being drilled in military evolutions, and especially in the use of the pike, large quantities of which weapons, it is understood have been made in different parts of the district. Bradford has been the chief seat of these illegal proceedings, the principal actors in which have over and over again avowed their determination to shirk no conflict with the civil or military authorities when, as they said, the time came for action. and, the time came for action.

On Sunday a very large gathering of the advocates of the "six points" took place at Wilsden, and those assembled openly practised training and drilling. From 2,000 to 3,000 men, armed chiefly with bludgeons, and the different ranks preceded in many cases by black heads, marched in military array upon the ground, and went through various evolutions . . . The determination was then expressed of resisting by arms any attempt by the authorities to capture the leaders; and the chairman told his followers that the infantry brought into Bradford would do good to the Chartists, as the latter could now arm themselves cheaply by disarming the military . . There were several violent speeches delivered, and the assembly, who stood the pelting of a terrific storm of lightning, thunder, hail and rain, marched back to their respective towns in the same military order in which they went to the meeting...

The magistrates at Bradford had not been idle in the meanwhile. About 2,000 special constables including men of all ranks, were sworn in. The police force were armed with cutlasses, and two companies of the 39th Regiment, two troops of the 5th Dragoon Guards, and about 30 of the Royal Horse Artillery, were dispatched on Saturday from Leeds, and two companies of the 81st were ordered up from Hull ... The first act of real outrage or the peace of the district had been perpetrated at Bingley on Friday, when two Chartist leaders were captured by the police on the charge of drilling some "National Guards" and taken before a magistrate resident in the district, by whom they were committed to York Castle for trial. As soon as the capture of the two leaders became known the alarm was sounded to their foolish followers, and upon the police attempting to convey the prisoners to the railway station. they were surrounded by some 2,000 persons, who beat them dreadfully and rescued the two fellows from custody, and they got clear off ... On Monday at 4 o'clock the whole of Bradford police force marched from the Court-house; they were followed by 1,000 special constables, the mayor and magis-trates, 200 infantry with fixed bayonets and two troops of dragoons . . . the supremacy of the law demonstrated, the forces returned to the Court-house, where precautions were taken to quell any outbreak that might be attempted during the night. Orders were issued to all publicans and beerhouse keepers to close their houses at eight o'clock and, in order to enpower the military to act instanter if required, the Riot Act

Horowitz was thought of as a confirmed bachelor, it was unkindly suggested that he married Toscanini's daughter in order to learn how to perform Beethoven. Fifty years on, he still rarely plays Beethoven but the marriage has lasted, despite severe tests. The tragic death of their daughter Sonia was the most traumatic. His reception in Russia clearly overwhelmed even a pianist used to adulation. "I have an American passport but a Russian soul", he said. "Can you imagine what it was like going back after 60 years? I met this very old lady. It was my niece. She was nine when I left") and met others who represented links with his upbringing, among them the daughter of Scriabin. Shortly before his death the composer heard the 10-year-old Horowitz play. "The Russians presented me with a Scriabin manuscript", says Horo-witz "Facsimile", corrects Wanda.

The pianist's only disappoint-ment was the cold shoulder he received from the Soviet authori-ties. Although his visit was one of the first fruits of the new US-USSR cultural exchange agreement ("Rea-gan gave me his benediction before I travelled, says Horowitz, drily), it unfortunately coincided with the bombing of Libya, and receptions for the pianist were officially boycotted. But there was nothing cold about the audience's response. "And you know the more an audience likes me, the more I like

Forty years ago, at the height of his American fame, Horowitz divided critical opinion sharply. Those who thought the stupendous technique of the "Tornado from the steppes" carried him to unchal-lenged heights were typified by the Manchester Guardian critic Neville Cardus, whose famous 1933 accolade of Horowitz as "the greatest pianist alive or dead" is still proudly recalled by its recipient. (Cardus later claimed that the description was an example of English irony in the face of American hyperbole, but it was too late.) Horowitz was a magnet for such superlatives.

One the other hand, what some saw as his ultra-Romantic bending (or even obliteration) of the composer's wishes in the cause of his own virtuosity has brought him some stinking reviews. The Chopin playing at his 1927 London debut, for instance, was described by The Times as "execrable", "horribly noisy" and "very tiring on the ear".

It is no surprise, then, that Horowitz now says he holds music critics in contempt. As probably the highestpaid instrumentalist in the world he can certainly afford to do so. Exactly how much he earns on each of his rare appearances is, as Horowitz would say, "a big military secret".

Whether or not he despises the critics, Horowitz now plays far less of the spectacular virtuoso repertoire - his glittering transcriptions of Carmen themes or The Star-Spangled Banner, for instance. "Don't forget it was 60 years ago when I was making my name. Tastes were not as advanced as now. In those days, you had to make an out-of-town recital into Barnum's Circus. I have given up all that pyrotechnic stuff, not because of old age but because of my changing tastes and aesthetics. Mozart is my god now."

However, the quirky penchant for Scarlatti sonatas is still a feature of his recitals. When he first championed the then-unknown Scarlatti, Horowitz took the matter very seriously, even inviting the Scarlatti scholar Ralph Kirkpatrick round to his Manhattan apartment to discuss interpretation. I ask Horowitz about his recollec-

But prompted by Wands ("they have the pound coin now, that's very disagreeable, I think") the memories came tumbling back of Barbirolli ("I recommended him America: I told them there was this good accompanist"), of the Queen's Hall, and particularly of Beecham, whom Horowitz does not exactly put on a par with Wanda's father. The problem was that they both made their New York Philharmonic débuts at the same concert, and Tchaikovsky's First Piano Concerto developed into a terrific tussie for supremacy over such basic matters as who finished first. Horowitz recalls this memorable 1928 occasion clearly. "Beecham, yes, he was eccentric. He tried to conduct without a score but it was not really in his range." By now Horowitz has thoroughly remembered Britain. "You know in the 1930s I used to play in 25 towns in Britain? Edinburgh, Manchester, Birmingham, Belfast..." The more traditional kinds of RA are unusually well displayed this year: landscapist/colourists like Robert Buhler and Fred Cuming immediately command attention as you enter any room where they are present, and such individual figures as Edward Bawden and Richard Eurich (both in their eighties) are as vital and unpredictable as ever. Bawden this year has a number of try, broadening his style for the purpose while remaining immediately identifiable, and Eurich continues to ring the changes on his glowing beach scenes with such energy and invention that each new one

Old ideas die hard, and it still comes as a slight shock to see Alien Jones's naughty ladies and enthusiastically interested men disporting themselves on the walls of the Academy, even if he is an ARAE Kitaj's more historically-minded pictures, like his monochrome The Mother, fit more comfortably, and so do Mockey's large near colour Hockney's large new colour lithographs, though anyone thinking to make a nice cheap purchase will get a nasty shock at the prices (£10,000 or more for one in an edition of 98). There are also immediately recognizable Bratbys from his Venetian series, Anthony Greens celebrating yet again his overheated youth in provincial France, a Craigie Aitchison Crucifixion and so on — all pleasant to see again, though unsurprising. Glynn Boyd Harte (but of course) already looks at home with a watercolour called Edmunds 78s, and there are quite a number of Spencerian fantasists working in much the style of Alan Dyer's Garden Recollection. I liked a couple of powerful drawings of beach scenes by Frances Edwards, and it is good to see Mick Rooney among this year's prize-winners. There is nothing, really, to startle, but a

As he has explained, this is not a new translation at all. Commissioned by the Kennedy Center five years ago, Mr Kopit simply went back to the standard William Archer translation and (with the help of Liv Ullman, who was to assume the role of Mrs Alving in the opening production) wrote a version which, we are assured, is truer to Ibsen's original intentions and does away with the "stilted and bombastic and contrived" aspects of the more familiar English text.

The script employed in Justin Greene's capable production flows freely enough and the humorous passages particularly those involving Peter Kelly's wheedling Jacob Engstrand and John Woodvine's stuffy Pastor Manders (a quirky portrait of beleaguered smugness), are given full rein - albeit in a fairly routine sitcom fashion.

The more light is cast on the text, however, the more of a period piece it seems to be. It is not simply that Mr Kopit has found no modern equivalent for Engstrand's favoured "Jesu!" (a locution which many might rather associate with Coleridge); or that, for instance, when he expostulates "Devil take me!" he is urged to "stop swearing" Perhaps it cannot be helped certainly, there can be no adequate substitute for the word "immorality" in an age

A weekly guide to leisure, entertainment and the arts

Enter stage right, one movie star

On a small stage away from the West End, Faye Dunaway is joining the ranks of film stars who are taking a screen break to return to the stage. Sheridan Morley on a growing trend

Next week Faye Dunaway makes her European stage debut in Circe and Bravo, Donald Freed's new play at Hampstead Theatre. Though best known for such movies as Bonnie and Clyde, The Thomas Crown Affair, Chinatown, and Network for which she won her Oscar, the 45-yearold Miss Dunaway is from a stage background and is the latest in a long line of screen stars making their way back to the boards. Perhaps the time has come for the English theatre to adopt MGM's old boast about being able to offer at the box-office "more stars than are in the heavens". Certainly there are a lot more around the West End at present than either on or off-

But a great many more Certainty some of these were, I suspect, buying the stars would of course claim, and rightly, that in the terminology of the American self, the one who had once showbiz journals they were been married to Humphrey "legit", and therefore stagebased, long before they ever became movie stars. And that in work of often classical distinction they have acquired long-established theatre audiences rather more intelligent and demanding than the kind of fans who merely go along to ories are still locked inside

aze at a movie star in the remarkable number of theatre tickets. Harold Pinter, director of the new Faye Dunaway play at Hampstead, was last represented in the West End as a director with the revival of Sweet Bird of Youth which ran triumphantly at the Haymarket last year. Now clearly some audiences went along to that theatre to see a were the two words "quite great Tennessee Williams drama, and some went to see what Pinter would do with it. But several thousand also went to see Lauren Bacali in Gabler or Lady Macbeth. Indeed, her only London stage appearance before Sweet Bird of Youth had been in a musical version of All About Eve called Applouse a decade ago. So precisely what were advance bookers buying into at that Haymarket box-office before any reviews appeared? Some, who knew the play already, might well have been booking in the foreknowledge that Miss Bacall was wonderful casting as Alexandra del Lago, the Princess Kosmonopolis herself, a ravaged American movie queen waking up in a hotel room of the Deep South with only a neurotic stud and the memories of her own celluloid past to keep her vodka arm steady.

Bogart and who had told him, in an immortal movie, that he never had to do anything except "maybe just whistle. You know how to do that, don't you, Steve? You just put your lips together and blow." Because those movie mem television sets and video cassettes all over the world, it is curiously hard for a star to escane them even when he or she matures into a player of greater distinction in live

Younger screen stars face different if allied problems. I doubt there will be too many other critics at the forthcoming Hampstead first night for Faye Dunaway who can recall her first stage appearance without checking the credits. I can, only because I happened to be there in 1964, four years before the Bonnie and Clyde that made her a star, she turned up as one of the three walk-on hospital the Fall at the Lincoln Centre. For those who believe that a drama critic is also supposed to be some sort of racing tipster, it would be good to be able to report that I had recognized a star in the making. In fact, when I located my programme years later, all I had written against her name

Here is an actress trained in Theatre Arts at Boston University and taken to the Lincoln Centre in its opening the leading role, and not season by Elia Kazan (as a because she had previously stunned them as Hedda film Hurry Sundown in 1967);

Curtain up: Faye Dunaway, who began her career on the stage, rehearsing this week for Circe and Bravo, her first theatre appearance in Europe an actress who has since then played on stage, in California, roles as demanding as Blanche duBois and in an American revival of Pinter's Old Times. Yet we are still amazed that movie stars are capable of a theatrical life, let alone that most of them started in one and will almost certainly fin-ish up in one, given the relative scarcity of roles for old people in what is now a teenage film industry. The fact that in America more and more movie stars have recently taken to off-Broadway may indeed be some sign of disen-chantment with the technology and the sci-fi freaks who have taken over the movies. But it is also a realization that, can be tested away from the pressures of the market place. In this country, Hampstead is a part of what we have by way of off-West End. Albert Finney and the Steppenwolf company from Chicago started Orphans there recently before moving it to the West in the right conditions, a script

Few of us would now be amazed to find Mr Finney starring in the movie version, and it is always possible that Faye Dunaway can similarly take Circe and Bravo through the West End to Broadway or Hollywood if it works. If it doesn't, a lot less will have been lost economically or professionally than had she chosen to make a much more fanfared return to the stage in ditions of Broadway, where anything less than a rave review from the New York Times would kill not just the production but also the script.

Elizabeth Taylor should have been so lucky. When she came to London in 1982 to give a very small performance inside a very large costume for Lillian Heliman's The Little Faxes, the rest of the cast kept retreating upstage from her wheelchair as if in the pres-ence of minor Balkan royalty. A year or so later, when she castastrophic revival of Private Lives, the evening had a quality of pure schlock. Audiences who had patently never been inside a live theatre before would gather nightly to see whether Burton was going to fall into the footlights or get married again during the run (in fact he did, though not to Miss Taylor) or whether Tayior would appear at all.

There still exists a very curious confusion about the screen image and the stage reality: audiences at the Phoe nix would seem well aware that what they are paying for is Martin Shaw as Elvis Presley rather than the late Mr Presley himself, but on the night I went to see Lesley Mackie as Judy Garland at the Strand, several people in the audience (admittedly on the far side of 50) screamed "Judy" at her first lookalike appearance, as if convinced that the star herself had magically come back to them from beyond the rainbow.

That screen/stage confusion becomes worse in the case of television soap-opera stars: until recently it was the policy of at least one touring manage ment to take hot stars out of television serials during the summer recess and send them out on the road in old thrillers. So far so good; an actor has to make a living. The catch was that in the advertising, the largest name was not that of the actor, or the playwright, or even the play, but that of the the impossible economic con- role the actor usually played on television, this being reckoned the best box office bait.

These things do, however, have a habit of going around in circles. Currently off-Broadway, Robert de Niro, perhaps one of the hottest movie stars around, is starring in a small theatre and a new play about Cuban drug dealers. The ticket battles have been so intense that the management has rigged up a live closed-circuit transmission of the play in a nearby and larger hall. It might have been easier took to Broadway with her ex- just to do the play on televi-husband Richard Burton for a sion in the first place.

Courage in overcoming the gaze factor takes various forms: either you appear in plays for which not even your most loving fan might have considered you suitable (Jack Lemmon is currently on Broadway in an acclaimed Long Day's Journey Into Night, directed by Jonathan Miller) or you challenge an audience's small-screen expectations (Peter Bowles returns

not in an Ayckbourn but in Osborne's The Entertainer); or you simply take an audience of starstruck movie fans and turn them into theatrego-ers by a blazingly dramatic turn of the kind that Dietrich used to offer at her solo

A movie or television star is undoubtedly worth several thousand pounds at a box-office in advance of a first night, and can operate as some sort of guarantee against bad reviews at least until the word of mouth spreads, but the equation is not quite as simple as it may look. A decade or so ago the Phoenix Theatre ran a season of big Hollywood stars in apparently safe revivals: Rock Hudson, Louis Jourdan and several others turned up to disappointing houses be-cause something in the nature of their Hollywood stardom did not suit the West End. A few years later, an actor of normal part of his ongoing career, when O'Toole does an altogether different generation, Al Pacino, was able to attract standing-room-only crowds of predominantly middle-aged and middle-class audiences to the infinitely more "dangerous" American and screen careers more often

Other stars combining stage have to play by the old Esther Williams rules. Miss Wilthe swimming star of whom one Hollywood mogul memorably remarked "wet she's a star, dry she ain't". By that same token, if Rex Harrison goes to the Haymarket in a Bernard Shaw revival, the money is on the box-office table long before any first night; if he goes to the Royal Court in a new play, the customers are more likely to await the reviews.

I can only very seldom remember seeing on stage someone who appeared to me to be a film star rather than an actor. Miss Taylor, certainly; and more recently Charlton Heston in a revival of The Caine Mutiny Court Martial. But this is not actually a value judgement: it was not as though Heston seemed all that bad in the role, he just played it as if to an invisible camera in the centre of the dress circle.

But the gaze factor has other curious distinctions: this country has produced precious few world-class movie stars since the early 1960s, so that when tabloid headlines announce "star in West End debut", they usually mean a Hollywood star.

Of the home team, consider the contemporaries Albert Finney and Peter O'Toole: both started in regional reps at Birmingham and Bristol, both made their names in new-wave plays and films of the late 1950s, both have made films (Tom Jones and Law-rence of Arabia) which have heen among the great money-

ROLE CALL

Faye Dunaway will be joining a long list of screen stars who are already playing to London audiences, have recently made their mark or are waiting in the wings. Last month Martin Sheen left the Royal Court after a highly acclaimed season in Larry Kramer's The Normal Heart; next month Cyd Charisse reaches the Victoria Palace to make her Victoria Palace to make her London musical debut in Charlie Girl. Albert Finney is appearing in Orphans, Glenda Jackson in Across From The Garden of Allah, Vanessa Redgrave in a Shakespearean double at the Haymarket, Richard Todd in an everlasting thriller at the Mayfair, Simon Ward as Lawrence of Arabia at the Old Vic, Anthony Hopkins in Pravda, Edward Fox and Maggle Smith as the Interpreters of Ronald Harwood's play at the Queens, Jeremy Irons is playing Leontes and soon Richard It at Stratford, and Sir John Mills is about to make a septuagenarian National Theatre debut in a new play the pre-war years Hollywood relied heavily on New York and West End stage stars to lend distinction and trained voices to its studios.

When the Hollywood Raj collapsed after the war, the next generations of movie stars still found a place in the sun rather more tempting than a cold winter in Boston on a pre-Broadway tryout of a new play which, if it failed, would do them no good and, if it succeeded, would only tie them up in New York for a couple of years and prevent them accepting more lucrative movie roles. A true theatrical

like Katharine Hepburn persisted in going back to the boards whenever she could: her partner Spencer Tracy made one brief stage appear ance on Broadway after the war in a play critics disliked almost as much as he did. whereupon he decided the hell with that and stayed in Hollywood for the rest of a long

But with the dismantling of the old Hollywood, actors have again acquired a mobil-ity and a freedom from studio contracts: moreover a short London stage season does not prohibit a more lucrative movie later in the year, and if you hit the right play, then that can be your movie

Hepburn realized that too, and all of half a century ago. Bored and frustrated by her studio's apparent inability to find her a halfway suitable script, she went back east to work with Philip Barry on ThePhiladelphia Story, bought the screen rights before it back to her own studio with herself in the leading role. Miss Dunaway could do a lot There was, of course, a time worse than keep her when the traffic all went in the chequebook handy at other direction: throughout Hampstead.

Reliving the tumult in Tuscany

Peter Brown muses on the art of good government as he tours Siena, a city of peace with a spot of equine anarchy

There comes a time when you have had one saint too many and you want to get away from them. It is easy to feel like that in Tuscany and especially in Siena, where haloes were de rigueur in the city's golden age. One remedy is to go to the Palazzo Pubblico and contemplate, in the hall of peace, the 14th-century frescoes of Ambrogio Lorenzetti.

Murals with a message, these. Demonstrating the effects of good and bad government in the city and the country, they are the most celebrated secular paintings of the Middle Ages — not a saint to be seen, though we must allow him the odd angel.

The one depicting good government in the country strikes a chord if you are, as we were, staying outside Siena. On the left, the city walls and inside them the populace at work; on the right, a small procession of people and animals trekking past calibrated vineyards towards the hummocky Tuscan hills, spiked with olives. Were it not for the suburbs, you muse, it would be much the same night in a sophisticated restaurant.

villa there, behind the fourth hill from the right . . .

The Palazzo Pubblico, a gaunt and ruddy building, also contains its fair share of saints but takes a relaxed attitude towards them. There's a maesta by Simone Martini, chock-full of haloes but in a remarkably poor state of repair. It is overshadowed, I suppose, by the better known maesta of Duccio, housed round the corner in the cathedral muse-When that was produced in 1311 the entire population of Siena, led by clergy and musicians, carried it in solemn procession

But Martini's masterpiece somehow seems more meaningful, with its peeling paint and in the setting for which it was designed. On a cool October evening we sat on hard chairs in front of it and listened to a concert played on the palace's rarely used medieval organ, an instrument with a secret panel which the organist can raise today, in fact I believe that is our at the appropriate moment to cathedral. Three days of festivities

reveal the pipes beneath. Pure nagic. In Florence it is possible to tire of art quite quickly. Siena is smaller, more coherent, and its beauty is more easily assimilated. It has, of course, a breathtaking cathedral of zebra stripes, more Muslim than Christian. And it has a famous tower, the Torre del Mangia, a jaunty edifice of brick crowned with stone, whose construction was thought so hare-brained that the brothers who built it had to bear all the risk themselves.

Towers and bells assume an importance in Tuscany that seems almost out of proportion. In the first great flood of Florence, in 1333. every bell in town was rung to God to stop the waters rising and the turnult drowned the thunder. In Ugolino in 1288 a Guelph and four boys were starved to death in a tower, the keys chucked into the Arno. Then there is San Gimignano, the medieval Manhattan, where the top nobs had the tallest towers. And in Pisa we all know what

But Siena's tower, and the Palazzo Pubblico, stand in a setting unlike any other - the Piazza del Campo, a word that cannot be translated as "square" because it isn't. On the edge of it, after the concert, we studied its geometry over a coffee and watched the Italian boys doing the cafe round, greeting a friend at every table.

Shaped like a scallop, it is divided by cobbled rows into nine men" who governed the city 600 years ago and who remain, captured in paint by Lorenzetti, in the hall of peace. Siena is built on three hills so that to walk within its walls is a constant undulation. But the city is pulled together by this campo, since all roads lead mansions and churches, the alleys towards it and 11 streets lead into it through narrow archways. What other town can boast such a focal point? In the summer Italy's best known horse-race, the bareback palio, takes place round it - two minutes of equine anarchy. Sean O'Faolain says that if, when watching it, your heart does not swell until it fills every cranny of your body, strangling all your guts in an orgasm of delight, then you cannot know the meaning of "man", "horse" or "sun". Perhaps. Certainly the postcards were full of it this autumn as we wandered through one of the archways and took to the streets (free, thanks to good government, of cars). Dwarfed by ancient palaces, of Siena seem so thick with history that you would feel like an impostor were it not for the laughing Sienese, who imbue them with that peculiarly Italian sense of immediacy. Florence, the Guelph city, has its charms but none of this intimacy. In 1230, my guidebook tells me, the Florentines catapulted dead monkeys and excrement over the walls of Siena to start a plague. Germ warfare! Me, I'm with the Ghibellines, Fancy anoth-

TRAVEL NOTES

Peter Brown went to Tuscany with Villas Italia, 405 Radnor House, Regent Street, London W1 (01-439 8547), who offer a W1 (01-439 8547), who offer a range of accommodation throughout the region. The Palio is held on July 2 and Aug 16. Recommanded books: Tuscany, an Anthology edited by Laura Raison (Ebury Press, £6.95); A Table in Tuscany by Leslie Forbes (Wabb & Bower,£12.95).

Outside the campo the only serious place to drink coffee in Siena is Nannini's (branches throughout the town). There you can take your choice from a startling variety of confectionery: panforte, the rich almond cake; ricciarelli, the sweet almond biscuits; marzipan, chocolate, can-died chestnuts, and all served by girls obviously chosen by the management for their resemblance to the young Sophia Loren.

Perhaps you will buy, in a green bonle, the herb-based elixir of Santa Caterina, the local saint (or one of them; for a more modern version, try Fiorucci; in La Lizza, the market, you can pick up his jackets half-price).

Not everyone enjoys a stay in Siena. Smollett, pugnacious old traveller, was "indifferently lodged in a house that snunk like a privy, and fared wretchedly for supper". He cannot have known about Grattacielo, hidden away in the Via Pontani where, in a tiny room, you can have pannini with anchovies and pesto, squid in vinaigrette, or chopped smoked herring with purple onions and half a litre of wine for 9,000 lire, which is very cheap.

Smollett would have been happier in our farming village up in the hills, a group of converted cottages clustered round the fattoria, a stately farmstead dedicated to Chianti, olive oil and tourism. It had its disadvantages: three miles across a rutted track to the nearest shop was one. But we drank a lot of the best black cockerel wine, we ate a lot of olives, we were surrounded by vineyards and woods in which we picked a lot of chestnuts. And at night, try as we might, we could not hear a car. Good government at its best.

reveals the home truths about Elgar

The first thing that struck me as I entered Edward Elgar's birthplace was the door lintel. So be warned: the scale of this famous address is truly cottagey.

"The Firs", as it was then, was where Elgar was born on June 2, 1857. His mother, who had a taste for country life as well as artistic leanings, had insisted on the young family moving from Worcester to the neighbouring village of Broadheath. But after only two years they had to return to town because of Mr Elgar's expanding music business.

However, Broadheath exerted a magnetic influence on Elgar throughout his life. He returned continually, for childhood holidays, for walks alone, or with his mother or brothers and sisters. It was there that he wrote his earliest pieces, at about the age of 10, for family theatricals. The brook which rises just over the road inspired music which much later found its way into the Wand of Youth suite. If Elgar had a single spiritual and creative home it was at Broadheath, and it was his wish that the cottage should be opened to the public after his death. His daughter, Carice, supervised the arrangement of the museum, which has been little altered since.

Of course museum is hardly an adequate word for what has been created. The cottage and its garden are rich in personal as well as musicological interest. A remarkable amount of material has been assembled - autographed scores and drafts, photographs, concert array of roses and two parallel notices and programmes, letters, cuttings and reviews, diplomas and certificates, paintings and sketches.

But it is the personal items that convey the strongest charge. Such was the range of Elgar's interests that there are some extraordinary exhibits. There is a device for the manufacture of hydrogen sulphide (which Elgar was said to have patented, though it was probably a joke); a large collection of the rubber stamps he delighted in using; his battered cycling map of the area; his golf clubs and microscope; a letter from his bookie (to whom Elgar was known by the pseudonym Elephant) and a library ranging from classics and Catholic devotional works to Edgar Wallace and P.G. Wodehouse.

Elgar's wind-up gramophone is still in working order. His close involvement with the recording industry in his last years ensured him a steady supply of free gramophones and records. He was also courted with freebies by a cigarette company eager for his endorsement, which he never gave, preferringhis pipes. One of Elgar's violins, which he passed on to a pupil, is on display. But his best one - a Gagliano - he sold to raise funds for a billiard table.

There are wonderful views from most windows of the Broadheath cottage. But you have to step outside to really soak up the atmosphere. The garden is pretty well as the Elgars designed it, with a fine

Worcester, the great cathedral city by the Severn, was the centre of Elgar's early life. He helped in his father's business (Elgar Bros at 10 High Street, now part of Russell & Dorrell, but marked by a plaque). He played the organ at St George's Roman Catholic Church in Sansome Place, and the violin in various local orchestras and with the Three Choirs Festival — still held every third year at Worcester, and often celebrating Elgar's music.

He conducted the glee club which met at the Crown Hotel in Broad Street, and the band at the Worcester County Lunatic Asylum.

He was also busy in his Worcester years composing, teaching and, at the age of 32, narrying his pupil Alice Roberts, the 40-year-old daughter of a distinguished Major-General. Elgar began to show signs of musical greatness while living at Malvern. He wrote Caractacus, inspired by the ancient English Camp on Hereford Beacon, and the Enigma Variations, musical portraits of by the hard winter. Many tender shrubs have lost branches and some appear to have been killed. However, do not dig them out too fast because many of them are in fact breaking from ground level and below. Where you can see buds bursting cut away the dead top growth.

Elegance amid the elephantine: dining at the revamped Dolphin Square Brasserie

Crest of the new wave

Two rather smart new restaurants have opened in London recently, both of them out of the catchment area of business men on expense accounts This will make it more difficult for them to succeed, but it makes the prospect of their success all the more appealing.

The Dolphin Brasserie in Dolphin Square has been through all sorts of changes in its time. It is curious to have an elegant restaurant in so elephantine a block as Doiphin Square; more curious that the restaurant should overlook an indoor swimming pool; and curiouser still the rumour that first drew me to have breakfast there five years ago - actress Jill Bennett, I confidently informed. could be seen swimming there every morning. Nestling croissants and cappuccino, I peered through the separating window on to the pool, scanning the horizon but saw no one who looked even a little like Jill Bennett. Nor have I seen her on subsequent occasions.

The novice whizz-kids behind the revamped brasserie nave failed to resurrect this attractive rumour in their publicity push, though they have taken the nautical suggestion of the place and, under the direction of Glynn Boyd Harte and the meticulous crastsmanship of Guy Lubbock, have converted the large room into an ocean liner fantasy. Handrails, dolphins, palm trees and starry skies abound. The piano is covered with painted shells and starfish; a half moon hangs over

I was boring and went for the grilled lamb cutlets, too steep at £10.75, but perfectly pink within and lightly crisp without; my companion closed her eyes amid the bliss of a chicken breast poached in a saffron sauce; moist, tender. and - all too rare in restaurants - from a real and onceclucking chicken. The vegetables were fresh, crisp, small and plentiful.

The pudding menu tends towards the sickly, but then pudding people enjoy cocking a snook at dieticians with something like profiteroles

It is no surprise that the food of Afghanistan, noshe djan, has a lot in common with the dishes served in neighbouring Pakistan, Iran, Tibet, and, of course the southernmost reaches of the Soviet Union. It has breads cooked in tandoor ovens, dry rice pilaus with fruit and nuts, and green teas spiced with cardamom and enriched with cream.

In Afghan cooking vegetables are as important as meat, and spices are as often used singly as in a mixture of equal parts of cinnamon, cloves, cumin and black cardamom seeds called char marsala words not so very different from the Indian garam masala spice mixtures. Helen Saberi, an English civil servant who married an Afghan structural engineer in 1972 and lived there until the Soviet occupation in 1980, has written Afghan Food and Cookery. All royalties will go directly to charitable organizations working in Afghanistan.

Do not be put off by the knowledge that cookery books written for good causes are usually uninspiring medleys of inconsistently written recipes. Helen Saberi's dishes are authentic, interesting and very cookable, as the following recipes, taken from the book, amply demonstrate.

The traditional Afghan kitchen is simple and basic. Most cooking is done over wood or charcoal fires, which results in a wide selection of substantial one-pot meals. Many of the dishes are oily by current European standards Often the oil can be skimmed off after cooking, or in some cases, reduced at the outset.

Norinj pilau is traditionally prepared with the peel of bitter Seville oranges. This version of the dish is the one made in Helen Saberi's family and, she says, is less sweet than many others. Use a sweet orange when Sevilles are out of season. Norinj pilau reheats

Entertainers enter the summer lists

Browsing through the latest Culver Street West, Colchescrop of wine lists is an ter, Essex. entertaining exercise. We learn from Simon Loftus of Adnams that he considers his book Anatomy of the Wine Trade to be one of the few that was written to be read in the bath. Lorne House Vintners, the Muscadet specialists, are busy crossing swords with wine writers over supermarket recommendations. Robin Yapp extols the delights of a fish soup he discovered in Le Toucquet and Rod Waite of Sherston Wine. Company proudly declares that he is a member of the Grand Order of ... But he or his printers. forget to mention what.

It all makes for an enjoyable It all makes for an enjoyable read and a definite improvement on the old turgid lists of a decade or so ago that rarely gave anything more than wines and their prices. Of them all Lay & Wheeler's list is still one of the largest and most comprehensive with most comprehensive, with more than 1,200 different wines to choose from.

The company is becoming increasingly interested in the private customer, its prices are competitive and the service excellent. Perhaps the simplest way of sampling Lay & Wheeler's wares is to order Richard Wheeler's selection -12 different wines that he considers to be of outstanding value, and ready for drinking.

The case, priced at £68.86, includes the delicious flowery and full-flavoured Fleur de Champagne from Duval Leroy, plus the splendid 82 Réserve de la Comtesse. Pichon-Lanande's second wine and Churchill's vintage Character port. Write for this and Lay & Wheeler's list to fi

and the control of th

Robin Yapp's list is always one I look forward to, as there are always several nuggets of information (and wines, too) tucked within the text. This year he rates the '83 Brézème as his most interesting newcorner. This red wine comes from a tiny, little-known vineyard at Livron, halfway between Valence and Montelimar, and is made from pure Syrah. Yapp Brothers summer wine offers include the appropriately named Something Fishy. This seaside case con-tains eight bottles of Chéreau 85 Muscadet-sur-lie, plus four jars each of Serge Pérard's fabled Rouille and Soupe de Poissons. (£40 from Yapp Brothers. The Old Brewery, Mere, Wiltshire).

Adnams of Southwold's

new list is, as always, one of the most handsome offerings. with beautiful photographs and an equally stylish text Adnams may not offer the fastest and most efficient service in the country, (apologies all round again this year for delivery problems) but the list of wonderful and unusual wines at keen prices cannot be faulted: (Adnams, The Crown, High Street, Southwold, Suffolk.)

The new Champagne House list (15 Dawson Place, London W2) is well-written, though occasionally slightly indul-gent. The informative, useful and correctly critical profiles on champagne houses are essential reading for any champagne lover. The low prices and superb service are another bonus.

A political maverick unmasked

wigh Dalton by Ben Pinlott Macmillan, 212.95)

When this large book - 624 pages of narrative - was first published last year it was greeted with a chorus of praise behind which I detected an element of surprise that a biography of Hugh Dalton could justify such detailed and expansive treatment. Today Dalton's name does not have the resonance of Attlee, Bevin, Cripps or even Herbert Morrison. One of the achievements of Ben Pimlott's masterly biography is to convince one that it should. For all Dalton's faults which like the rest of him, were large and loud. he played a commanding role in the abour Party, the Labour Government, and the development of postwar Britain. In addition, Pimlott's acute and unflinching analysis of Dalton's background and private life throws light on his public career. Dalton was a vulnerable pachyderm and beneath the thick skin there was an almost tragic void.

Born in 1887, the son of a canon of Windsor who had been tutor to Prince Eddy and the future King George V, educated at Eton and King's College, Cambridge, Dahon reacted strongly against his courtly background.

At Cambridge he met, and was in due course dropped by, Rupert Brooke. He also became a socialist.

impossible throughout his life to ablish a close relationship with any contemporary. His marriage was a desert, and the early death of his and Ruth's only daughter is a chilling tale of neglect.

It was in public life that he expressed himself. In the years up to the Second World War, his most important contribution as a Labour MP was made on the party's National Executive, where he played a crucial role in developing Labour policy and in steering it away from pacifism to a cautious support of rearmament.

During the war at the Ministry of Economic Warfare and the Board of Trade he proved himself a formidable minister, loathed by senior civil vants but regarded with affection by their juniors. At the same time he was largely responsible for the policy on which the Labour Party went to the country in 1945.

There followed the apogee of his career, the years at the Exchequer. Pimlott convincingly argues that his achievements as Chancellor have been misinterpreted and misunderstood. Dalton's reputation has been unmade by two groups of people: Conservatives, to whom he was a class traitor and who hated him more than any other Labour politician; and economists who were Liberal Keynesians.

Dalton was never a Keynesian, partly for personal reasons but above all because he was a socialist, perhaps the only truly socialist Chancellor we have ever had. Keynes believed that his theories save capitalism. Such was hardly Dalton's aim. He liked controls, he believed in rationing and, more than anything else, he believed in equality. Faced with a choice between increasing production and reducing inequality he would, I am sure, have chosen the Dalton's life, public and private, is full of puzzles. For example, after Country diatribes of Regency ladies his leak before his last Budget, why did Attlee so readily accept his resignation and, given Dalton's position, how was he able to? One answer, suggested by Pimlott, is that neither Attlee nor any of his colleagues wanted Dalton to stay. "All at the top agreed", John Freeman said, "that Dalton wasn't one of them." All his life he was an outsider who excited among contemporaries instant distrust. But to the stable of young politicians whom he trained and supported, he was approachable and stimulating

According to Piralott, there is no evidence that he was homosexual in the physical sense. It is clear nonetheless that the friendship of good-looking, intelligent young men from Rupert Brooke in his youth to Tony Crosland in his later years provided the most comforting and comfortable human relationships he experienced in a life of consider able achievement and noisy, flamboyant activity, which was alarming in the void that underlay it all.

Perceval: The Story of the Grafi by Chrétien de Troyes, translated by Nigel Bryant (Boydell & Brewer, £9.95)

One of the foundation documents of European civilization, this famous romance has never before been entire-ly translated into English. The dramatic adventures of Perceval, intertwined with those of Gawain, are of interest to anybody stirred Nigel Bryant's anobirusive and sensitive version includes the continuations by poets who were drawn to the quest for the Grail, and shows how Chrétien's enigmatic picture of it was resolved by later poets.

Eliot under the scholar's glass

7.S. Eliot: A Study in Character and Style by Ronald Bush (Oxford, £6.95)

There have been so many bad books about T.S. Eliot that it s a great relief to find a good one. It is by a Californian professor and is well-written in the judicious style of Amer-ican scholars that faintly recalls Henry James. Professor Bush has done an enormous amount of homework and set the poems into context in Eliot's prose writings and in the books that influenced him, particularly the French ones. The picture he paints of Eliot's progress through life is completely convincing, from Prufrock to Quartets. It is full of valuable incights into particular poems and, as a whole, it makes Eliot more understandable as a man, and lonelier as a writer, and yet more rooted in the recent past. It is not the whole truth - it allows perhaps too little for humour but from a literary point of view it is perfect.

Its best virtue lies in not being too long and not labouring points into the ground. I take it most people will agree

One ends up liking and respecting him more than ever that Eliot was a great poet, greatest in fragments as Propertius was, and perhaps Donne, but also mighty in his architecture, well-read and studious. It must also be true as usual that the style was the man, and the changes in the style must indicate changes in the man. It is this relation of character and style that Professor Bush has so convincingly traced.

One ends up liking and respecting Eliot more than ever. One can test such a book by its footnotes. They are admirably scholarly and wide-ranging and constantly open new perspectives. It must have taken considerable discipline to relegate them to the back of the book for fear that they might impede the faultless lucidity of the main argument. They contain the material for numerous monographs and intuitive essays.

I found it extremely useful, for example, to have a brief history of attitudes to The Hollow Men, which (I agree with Bush and Helen Gardner) is less a coda to The ment of a new resurrection theme, however faltering. It is at least an interesting exercise that this book should relate the new theme rather to style than to religion.

This underlying, hard-nosed attitude to poetry was the necessary step in Eliot criticism, and it has removed what used to seem intractable problems in his work. Still, Eliot was a deep and multiple writer, and there is room for critics of different kinds. We have not come to the end of Eliot's religion.

His own supremacy as a critic is no longer unchal-lenged; he is on the way to becoming as dated as Matthew Arnold. His supremacy for religion and seriousness no longer commands the assent or respect it once did. What survives best are his mighty powers as a poet, but even there his rather secret decisions about style, and about what poetry is or can be, need nowadays to be illuminated. For those who believe, as I do, that he was the greatest poet in English of this century, it is extremely important to have this full and sober analysis of how he came to write as he did. Those others who are tempted to erode his reputamovement as an eccentricity, could learn salutary lessons from Professor Bush. Eliot was in some ways a one-man modern movement, but in deeper ways a one-man mainstream of English poetry. He is a liberating writer, and The Four Ouartets really are the crown of a lifetime's devotion. Professor Bush has an accurate eye for images, and an accurate ear for tone in poetry. In his reading, The Four: Quartets are the most terrifying presents any poet has offered us for a long time.

James Mason, who died in 1984, made more than 100 films and must have regretted many of them. And yet now that his career can be judged as a whole, and time has lent detachment, he emerges as one of the finest screen actors Britain has ever produced. His career had three phases.

Entering films in 1935, he first came to general attention during the Second World War. as the man-you-love-to-hate of the melodramas The Man in Grey. The Seventh Veil and The Wicked Lady, exuding an evil charm that captivated audiences happy to lose themselves in wartime escapism.

The climax to what in retrospect can be called his "British" period was Carol Reed's Odd Man Out, a film of extraordinary power and im-

At which point, with the British cinema at his feet, Mason loudly bit the hand that fed him, denounced J. Arthur Rank and all his works, and to the consternation of his vast following decamped for Hollywood, But instead of turning him into a new Cary Grant, America nearly buried him.

The second age of Mason, which lasted from the mid-1940s to the early 1960s, seemed, at the time, a period of lost opportunity when at best he marked time but more often took unworthy parts in bad films. The current verdict on these years is kinder. They included, for instance,

An artist with a quixotic eye

giant finger descends into the gallery, enumerating the paintings one by one. Godlike, Patrick Caulfield is giving a guided tour of Pissarros. Cézannes. Chardins. and De Hooghs, reproduced in little black and white photographs. They are the paintings which he has chosen for this year's "Artist's Eye" exhibition at the National Gallery, which has been running in cardboard mock-up for some months in his studio. Caulfield is the latest contemporary artist to be invited to make his choice from the gallery's collection. Predecessors, who include Hockney and Hamilton, took the game seriously but Caulfield seems to have been somewhat quixotic in his choice. For a start, he has refrained from any religious subjects. He is plucking Manet's "The Waitress" back from an exhibition at the Courtauld Gallery, and is having two pictures reframed. Cézanne's portrait of his father will hang beside a 17th-century Dutch lady because "having the same proportions and similar tiled floors, they could both be an extension of the same scene". When he is not exercising his powers over National Gallery pictures, Caulfield, aged 50, works in his roof-top Soho studio producing the paintings for which he is famous. In bright, neon pop colours sepa-rated by the thick black lines that are his trademark, they teasingly glamorize the blandest aspects of modern life: corners of wine bars; fried eggs on a plate. Sometimes he borrows a photorealistic excerpt from a photograph or earlier painting. Caulfield has always been somewhat of a loner, both socially and artistically. As a student at the Royal College of Art, one year behind Hockney, Kitaj and Allen Jones, instead of cashing in on their fame he said he regarded himself as "lucky to have come in quietly on the second wave and to have kept a low profile". In the mid-1950s, when his student colleagues were passionately painting social realist works in muddy colours, he opted for a naive style influenced by Douanier Rousseau. Later, when Abstract Expressionism was all the rage, he switched firmly to representational images with no auto-

Today, contracted to Leslie Waddington, the contemporary art magnate, Caulfield has exhibitions in Cork Street

as often as he produces the work (he is very slow).

Caulfield is the human counterpart of his painings: sunny yet enigmatic. All around his studio are tantalizing clues to the man: a cafe chair around which curls what looks like a fossilized cactus ("by an ex-student of mine, when I was external assessor at Chelsea School of Art"); two Cubist guitars roughly scissored out of cardboard, and a tank battle scene scrawled on a blackboard (by Arthur, the youngest of his three sons). Most intriguing of all is a wall turned into a kitsch cafe counter. Here, apart from bongo drums on the shelf ("sometimes I bang on them") and a curvaceous palette ("given to me by Howard Hodgkin as a 50th birthday present") stand multicoloured glasses ever waiting for cus-tomers, and Budweiser cans glued together ("because I was drinking, and thought they looked rather pretty").

ut, although talking emphatically, Caulfield maintains a distance. His clothes are anonymous, a bland ensemble of shirt, jersey and trousers mitigated only by the ridge of stitching on his slip-ons. His easel is empty, because "I never show my work in progress. To talk about it would disturb my relationship with what I'm doing," He even tells the time from afar, opening his studio door and focusing his binoculars on a local church clock.

So how did he set about making his choice? "I was rather sceptical when I started. I thought, this is truly a finite proposition." But once he had been supplied with a catalogue of the entire collection he his normal working methods. "It was like having a mail order catalogue", he says. "I went through it with little red stickers. Then I went and looked at the pictures, and just kept going back." The gallery is a five-minute walk away.

became inspired, able to work in the selective way similar to

The first thing Caulfield knew when selecting from the National Gallery was what he did not like. "I can't stand flower paintings because they remind me of birthday cards. I hate pictures that are very busy - boat scenes; people having their heads cut off. What I wanted were paintings with a timeless quality -I've ended up with many Dutch works - landscapes, portraits, and genre scenes. also liked colours that demand distance from each other."

And so Saenredam's "Church Interior", was chosen, and, De Hoogh's "Courtyard" after the frame has been changed ("because, although it is historically correct, the colours bleed into the frame"). He has also included Fabritius's "A View of Delft". because of his being a man of the Sixties, he thinks. "It's got a modern feeling to it - this kind of hippie character sitting with his guitar."

Some favourites have not been included because they are too big. Vernet's battle scenes for example (which remind him of the days he used to play war games). Even his own two paintings have to hang outside the exhibition proper because of their size and comparative brightness. It remains to be seen wheth er Caulfield's rehang-of the National Gallery will work. He has no advice for the unsuspecting public who might be perplexed by his idiosyncratic choice. "Their eyes should dictate how they look", he says. "The room will be white, so when you emerge from those long rooms with heroes and Christ figures jumping around the walls against plum-coloured wallpaper, it should look a bit different. It may look a bit boring. I hope it will look special."

ARTS DIARY China syndrome

There has been an embarrassed silence from the mighty Koger Collection in America after their last minute withdrawal from the International Ceramics Fair which opens in London on June 13. Having promised a unique collection of Ming and Ching porcelain as the centrepiece of the fair over a year ago, Koger sent a brusque telegram a fortnight ago saying that be-cause of the increasing fear of terrorist reprisals they would not be sending their china. The implication was that the other American dealers and academics would also pull out. Not so. Brian Houghton, the fair's organizer, says: "Not a single American has pulled out. But it was a shattering blow when I received the telegram — i stili haven't got over it." Another of the fair's organizers says: "Koger have ended up looking very silly indeed. The value of the combined collections from all the visiting Americans is rather more than the Koger Colon lection. Not a single person who is exhibiting has ex-pressed any anxiety at all."

Birthday blow

It is hard to imagine that in 1986 a piece by Mozart could be premiered in Britain, but when Barry Tuckwell played the Mozart Horn Concerto Number 1 in D on Thursday it was the first time the piece had been given in its entirety. To perform the original second movement - instead of the version usually played, which was written by Franz Xaverl Sussmeyer - he had to rework some of the manuscript himself. Tonight he scores another first at the Wigmore Hall, a Richard Rodney Bennett piece written specially for Tuckwell's 55th birthday.

Bewildered patrons of the National Theatre were astonished to see Billie Whitelaw arrive in the foyer in an edvanced state of undress. At a lunch this week to thank NT spousors who provide £500,000 a year to help keep the place going, the actress made an impassioned plea for better sign posts. She revealed that while making her way back from the tanning machine, which actors use to save on body make-up, she stumbled through the wrong door. Once you get lost you always 🕦 end up in the foyer", she explained. "Without your clothes on it can embarrassing."

While the Royal Philharmonic Orchestra flies to Orkney next month to give the world premiere of Peter Maxwell Davies's violin concerto, its instruments will be going by Datapost. Having arranged a simultaneous live broadcast on BBC2 and Radio 3, the corporation's music supremos will be keeping their fingers crossed that musicians and their instruments will be together on time. But ne doubt the Post Office chairman Sir Ron Dearing will be ready with a song or two for the cameras should his lads fail to locate the percussion.

The bridge to reconciliation

Catholic means universal, and root of pre-Reformation and the implication is that any of Reformed English Catholi-Church of England does, Holy Scripture, the Creeds, tradi-tion and the threefold Apostolic ministry, is fundamentally Catholic in outlook and thinking.

حكدًا عن الأحل

At the Reformation and in succeeding centuries the Church of England rejected both the extremes of Roman authority and the dogmatic attitudes inherent in Protestant thinking, building on the past and developing a distinc-tive spirituality and tradition. That tradition has em-braced episcopal authority and discipline while maintaining a certain openness of theological debate, which says as much for the strength of the Church as it does for her apparent weakness in, at times, being less than dogmatic. In her approach to faith and order the Church remains Catholic, in her approach to authority reformed in that specifically English way which encourages debate and discussion.

of the article on this page in The Times on May 17 by Jonathan Harfield, "The Anglican culture shock," appears to be that the Church of England is a weak and vacillating body, essentially Protes-tant in character and therefore lacking in the ability to enter into any real rapprochement with Rome.

The underlying assumption

Such an approach demonstrates a misunderstanding both of Anglican faith and tradition and of that essential pragmatism which lies at the significant parts in the development and changing shape of the Church of England. cism. It also implies a presumption on the part of Rome of pre-eminence rather than of precedence, which is hardly in keeping with the spirit of unity and the reconcilation of Chris-tian traditions. have all kept the quality of discussion and debate at a high level involving both the

Rome is no longer the centre of the world and it could be said in all charity that in matters of faith a similar shift of emphasis outwards is called for. After all, Hans King may not be particularly welcome in the rarefied atmosphere of the Vatican but he none-the-less has much to say of concern and interest to Roman Catholics and indeed to Anglicans alike. environment.

Canterbury has never claimed such an ultimate authority as the centre of the Anglican Communion but the Archbishop is nevertheless seen as an authoritative figure among Anglicans, and Canter-bury Cathedral as the mother church of that diverse communion. In that delicate but effective balance of "primus inter pares" the Church of Rome may find an example worth reflecting upon as she struggles with some of her own complex internal problems.

Anglicans are well used to

On the one hand it can be argued that these are signs of disunity; on the other it can be said that the Holy Spirit continues to refine and develop the witness of the Church to the Gospel of Christ in a changing and challenging

The Church of England is uniquely able, through its tendency to absorb extremes and to cultivate debate without fundamental disunity or inquisatorial censure, to act as a bridge church between Protestants and Roman Catholics. Such an ability should not be underestimated in Rome or by the Protestant churches nor should the Anglican Communion be dismayed by those occasional rifts which appear

It would seem to me, how ever, that peither Anglicans nor Roman Ctholics should make any assumptions regarding organic unity on the basis of the report. Indeed, I would venture to suggest that the whole emphasis of the movement for Christian unity should shift from the basic concept that unity necessarily entails some form of uniformity.

It has to be accepted that the Church is as diverse in its structures, traditions and viewpoints as is humanity itself. What is needed is not uniformity but mutual acceptance and understanding; a unity expressed by independent denominations accepting to threaten its seemingly fragthe interdependence involved ile but tenacious unity. US trade deficit shrinks by surprise 17 per cent

The United States trade deficit, assisted by sharply lower oil prices, narrowed to $12.07 billion (£8.07 billion) last month, a surprising 17 per cent drop from the March figure.

Commerce Department of-ficials released the data as the White House stepped up its campaign to defeat protectionist legislation now before

President Reagan, in a verbal sparring match with Dem-ocrats who accused him of ruining US export trade, said the Bill would result in higher consumer prices and put millions of Americans out of jobs.

"This Bill is worse than protectionism. It is destructivism", Mr Reagan said in a speech aimed at Senate Republicans who have threatened to pass a revised version of the politically popular

Economic forecasters have been predicting for the last two months that US growth will pick up sharply in the second half of the year because of the favourable, unforseen factors of lower oil prices, a lower dollar, low interest rates and low inflation.

But imports also dropped last month by 5 per cent, indicating that the effects of the lower dollar have yet to be beneficial and continuing a trend of the last 12 months.

No profit forecast by Thames

By Clare Dobie

Thames Television, the London weekday television company whose successes include Minder, Edward and Mrs Simpson and The Sweeney, is to be floated on the stock market next month with an expected value of nearly £80 million.

It hopes to sell some of the 18 million shares on offer to its viewing public. Thames is already carrying advertise-ments expressing its corporate message, and it has plans for further advertisements.

It published a pathfinder prospectus yesterday, with nost of the details of the flotation except the price, which has yet to be decided. Thames also announced that Sir Ian Trethowan, the former director-general of the BBC, has joined the board. The pathfinder document sets out Thames' uneven profit record, with profits rising from £8.6 to £14.1 million in the year to March 31, failing to £8.75 million in the following year and recovering to £14.6 million last year. There is no profit forecast, but Thames reports that advertising revenue is running 22 per cent ahead of last year.

Thames operates under a franchise which expires at the end of 1989. It expects to retain the franchise after that, but the "pathfinder" points out that, if its application was unsuccessful, it would continue to make programmes.

The document also gives a warning that the proposed changes to the levy system will hurt Thames in the short

Why bonds market menu is bringing indigestion

The US bond market dropped with a thud on Thursday, a move duly followed by gilts yesterday. The markets have taken on board the general message, underlined by the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development this week, that lower inflation, falling interest rates and stronger growth are on the menu. What is causing the present indigestion is the order the courses are

The bond market fall, more than two points at the long end, was a direct result of evidence of a more robust US economy. The 1.5 per cent April rise in the leading indicators was the biggest for three years.

The implication is that, while interest rates may come down naturally, there is less need for the Federal Reserve Board to be cajoled into a discount rate cut to keep things moving.

It is this belief that has been driving the dollar up over the past fortnight. The dollar has sailed through the 170 level against the yen and 2.30 to the mark with little difficulty. Yesterday, it was up around DM2.3250 and 174.50 yen, pushing the pound down a couple of cents to $1.47 in the process.

The narrowing of the trade deficit to $12.07 billion last month, from the $14.52 billion originally estimated for March, added to the fun.

The gilt market, in the absence of much to chew on at home, feeds almost exclusively on happenings in the US bond market. Yesterday's falls, extending to a point at the long end, reflected Thursday's drop on Wall Street, tempered by hopes that an early base rate cut could still be on the

However, a fall in the sterling index from 76.5 to 76.0, albeit entirely due to the dollar, and a £1.22 billion shortage, pushed money market rates up by a sixteenth.

In the absence of an international lead, and the US bond market was treading water yesterday, domestic factors may play a more prominent role in the timing of the next base rate move.

After the dreadful April money numbers, when sterling M3 jumped by 3.2 per cent, a more respectable rise of between 0.75 and 1 per cent is expected for banking May, figures for which will be published in 10 days. That still leaves the 12-month growth rate at 17 per cent, comfortably above the 11 to 15 per cent target, and enough to keep the caution signals flashing at the Bank of England.

One area where the new pragmatic monetary policy is clearly succeeding is in its effects on our old friend, the bill mountain. The Bank's commercial bill holdings, a bloated £16 billion a year ago, have plunged to less than £9 billion this month.

The removal of this massive distortion will help the embryo commercial paper market, and this in trun should produce a slightly happier picture for broad money growth later in the year.

A nail-biting finish

The final stages of Dixons' £1.5 billion bid for Woolworth Holdings are going to be a severe test of nerves both for Dixons and for Woolworth's large institutional shareholders.

Dixons has to decide where to pitch its final offer. It has no intention of paying "too much": diluting earnings and setting up a disappointing aftermarket in the combined group's shares. The market would not thank it for that.

Woolworth shareholders, some of whom are busily trying to push Dixons' offer price up, will eventually have to decide at what price, if any, they are sellers. If Dixons does not respond to some of the wilder market expectations - and there is every indication it will not - Woolies shareholders who are not prepared to risk the possibility of a fall in the price should the offer fail, would have to take what was on offer or sell in the

Woolworth's shares are unlikely to fall to pre-bid levels of around 600p if Dixons' bid fails, because the defending management has done an excellent job of raising awareness of Woolworth and where it is going. But there must be a downside from yesterday's price at 835p, which puts the company on a multiple of 34 times last year's earnings excluding property

The market is talking up the Woolworth price because the opportunities presented by the prize are so enormous. The vast floor space and low level of sales per square foot have not yet been made to work. Although talk of £10 a share, which raises the historic multiple to more than 40, seems excessive, it is the future that Dixons is being asked to pay for. Dixons, if its bid fails, carries its own downside risk.

It is in no hurry to raise its bid - it has until June 13 - and when it does, an intelligent guess might be around воор то устр. Ат устр ще сагші dilution this year, assuming profits from Dixons of £100 million and Woolworth of £105 million, would be about 24 per cent before any merger benefits. Its own share price performance could be crucial, as it was in the Currys bid when Dixons' shares rose steadily in anticipation of victory.

Mr Greg Hutchings, chief executive of Tomkins, said the offer was intended to be a knockout blow. Pegler's board, however, rejected it as inadequate. Mr Rex Inman, the finance director, said: "We could not recommend such highly-valued paper to our shareholders."

Tomkins is offering 29 of its shares for 14 Pegler shares, valuing Pegler at 658.7p a share, an 11.5 per cent increase on its first bid and 40 per cent higher than Pegler shares before the bid was announced. The cash alternative has been raised to 600.7p per share from 529.3p. The convertible election has been raised to £5.50 in nominal Tomkins convertible preference from £4.94. Pegler said shareholders accepting the cash offer would forego Pegler's 14.25p final dividend, reducing the value of the cash to 586.45p.

Anglo United and Burnett discuss link The on-off relationship be-

Sir Jeremy Morse, chair-man of Lloyds, has written to Standard shareholders rejecting the valuation made by Standard of its United States subsidiary, Union Bancorp. In its defence document a week ago Standard's US advisers, Goldman Sachs, gave Union a theoretical market value worth nearly half the Lloyds offer although the bank contributes only about 20 per cent to Standard's total group profits. But, according to Sir Jeremy, "assets are only worth what they earn, unless liquidation is intended."

Sir Jeremy accuses Standard of exaggerating the differences of structure and management style of the two banks and of making an inaccurate assess- as complex as Standard.

Polly Peck's image is still convalescing

ing in the City is still conva-lescing after the confidence shattering it took last year when analysts' expectations had to be severely downgraded just two weeks before the preliminary results. While yesterday's figures were in line with forecasts, it will take more than one set of interims to rebuild credibility.

The 10p fall in the share price to 191p reflected particnlar disappointment with the unchanged dividend. Analysts had impressed upon the company that one way to improve its image would be to redistribute rather more of the impressive earnings. But with an interim dividend cover of 16, Polly Peck is doing nothing to allay fears about the quality of earnings. The company says it will decide and review the dividend policy at the year end but this has done nothing to dampen full-year expect-

Currency movements might have been specified as one of the reasons for caution; in comparison with last year, the average exchange rate of sterling against the Turkish lira had moved about 60 per cent against the company. But apparently the overall effect of exchange rates has been relatively neutral, thanks to Polly Peck's improved Currency

Nevertheless, margins in the agricultural division which produced a near-£4 million improvement to £26.8 million - were down, albeit to a still enviable level of 34 per cent. If not currency, then a shift in sales growth from the Middle East to Europe may be the reason. Electronics is still a far smaller contributor at £1.7 million. Here, too, margins slipped but are said to have improved since the year end. Textiles profits fell by £0.2 million to £2.6 million.

L Messel, the company's broker, is staying with its full-year forecast of £70 million pretax, up from £61 million ast year but well below the £82 million forecast for 1984-85 which had to be so hurriedly downgraded.

A prospective p/e of just four would normally look a giveaway. But both investors and the City can be forgiven twice-shy approach to the shares. Perhaps with its new ADR facility, Polly Peck will find it easier to win friends in the US.

Common Bros

Common Brothers, the shipping line rescued 10 months ago by shareholders and bankers, was the stock market's worst performing share last year. For those who like to live dangerously it has the trappings of the punt of 1986: a tiny share price and little scrip in circulation.

Indeed the shares immed 50 per cent, from 6p to 9p, after yesterday's interim results to December 31. That is still no comfort to investors who followed tips to buy the shares two years ago at 173p. Common now pins its hopes on the two passenger ships run by its Bahama Cruise Line. The Chernobyl disaster, international terror ism and the falling dollar have persuaded many Americans to cruise at home rather than venture abroad. Bahama showed a profit in the first half and summer bookings are up on last year. Overall, Common showed a pretax loss of £630,000 against £17.9 million last time. Its other main business is the redundant drilling ship IRO Frigg in which all the equity has been written off. Attempts to sell the ship have failed and a sale at any price is now being considered.

Looking ahead, Common knows it must diversify, although attempts to find new ventures have so far come to

In this light, even the most hardened punters should note that the Swedish merchant bank Gyllenhamar, which took a 7.7 per cent stake last year, passed up a chance to take up further shares at 16.1p.

Lopex

Recent events have taught investors that advertising, public relations and marketng are intrinsically volatile. Clients can come and go, as can employees.

Lopex, which is joining the stock market with a price tag of £19.5 million, claims that its business is so well spread that a problem in one area can easily be offset elsewhere. It operates in nine countries and about half its pretax profits originate overseas. The two biggest businesses, consumer advertising and marketing support (which takes in sales promotion, audio visual services and Heathrow Airport conference staging) each ac-count for 28 per cent of this year's forecast pre-interest profits. Market research and specialist communications (including financial and corporate) account for a further 8 per cent each. That spread of business sounds reasonably secure, but Lopex still has its problems. Last year's profits of £2.3 million were barely higher than in the previous year, because the company lost the large Seagram advertising account and had difficulties in South Africa.

That virtual standstill has not dented the company's confidence, however. It is increase in pretax profits On forecast earnings of 9.35p after a 44 per cent tax charge, the shares are being offered on 15.5 times earnings. It seems that, in valuing Lopex, Kleinwort Benson has taken its cue from the good reception accorded to Charles Barker, whose share offering was oversubscribed 11 times last week. Charles Barker did not make a profit forecast but, assuming it increases profits by 20 per cent this forecasting a 39 per cent

offer-for-sale price. Lopex and Barker are similar in that they are in roughly the same business, but dissimilar in that Lopex has high borrowings and Charles Barker has none. On May 2 Lopex had net debt of £6.3

year, its prospective multiple

was between 13 and 14 at the million against shareholders' funds of £2.8 million at the last balance sheet date. The flotation will reduce borrowings by £1.25 million. Charles Barker's five-year record shows a steadier rising trend

In both cases institutional holders are selling some shares. Of the 3.1 million Lopex shares on offer, 1.4 million are new and 1.8 million are being sold by existing shareholders, including Prudential Assurance. which is retaining a 5 per cent

ARC Properties, a wholly-owned subsidiary of the Amey Roadstone Corporation, itself a 100 per cent subsidiary of Consolidated Gold Fields, has unveiled plans for a £150 million out-of-town shopping centre at Runnymede, Berkshire - close to the M25 and

ARC proposes to build a glass-covered 600-ft long shopping mall on what will be a floating island site, relaimed from its former quarry at Runnymede. The 1 million-sq-ft retail development, which will include a 300,000sq-ft department store as an anchor tenant, will be surrounded by a yacht basin and

ARC has taken a year to revise its original plans for the 260-acre site, of which 60 acres will be devoted to retailing. The company sees the development as a way of bringing back to profitable use land that has been "disadvantaged" by quarry-

But the site is in the green belt, and its future will lie in the hands of the Secretary of State for the Environment, Mr. Nicholas Ridley. There is likely to be a public inquiry into the ARC proposals.

If planning consent for the scheme is given it will enable the company to capitalize on a ming sector of the property narket. The reciamation costs will be high. But the project makes financial sense as ARC has the site in its books at bistoric cost.

ARC Properties has another potential out-of-town retail site at Maidstone, Kent, where it plans a 500,000-sq-ft retail

The company, which has a total land bank of a thousan acres for which it hopes to find new uses, is a property developer and trader, and as such intends selling its developments, at least for the time

No one buyer would pur chase the Runnymede scheme if it goes ahead, and new ways of selling such investments are being investigated by ARC ARC's Runnymede scheme would be a suitable candidate for the new forms of property investment vehicles mooted by the property industry. It could be sold to a consortium of investors or floated in some kind of single asset vehicle.

Why savings certificates are still worth having

Would-be investors in Na-tional Savings Certificates can breathe again. Changes have been announced concerning various National Savings securities, but the 31st issue of National Savings Certificates paying 7.85 per cent tax-free remains on offer, although if interest rates continue down, it could be withdrawn at a moment's notice.

A National Savings officer said: 'It will be looked at and reviewed from time to time but no decision has been made to withdraw 31st issue."

With bank base rates down again from 10.5 per cent to 10 per cent and pundits predicting base rates at 9 per cent before the end of the year, investors dependent on interest from investments to sup-plement their income, should not miss the opportunity to selves into 31st issue - as we have been saying for many weeks now.

And anyone with early issues of National Savings Certificates which have now matured, should definitely not cash them in.

Extension terms (that is the rate of interest paid on ma-nued certificates) have come down from 8.52 per cent tax free to 8.01 per cent, with effect from 1st June. But this is still as good as most building society accounts.

Cheltenham & Gloucester Building Society, for example, the market leader for buildingsociety, extra-interest accounts is paying only 7.3 per cent (basic-rate tax paid) for investments of between £500 and £4,999. To get the top rate of 8.05 you have to have £10,000 or more to invest.

But investors with mature certificates should keep an eye on the competition. Unlike the orginal savings certificates, which pay a fixed return, extension terms vary at short notice, although National Savings Bank increasing the maximum intional Savings tends to try to Investment Account - the vestment limit from £50,000

keep them competitive.

In order to stop the massive encashment of the index-linked retirement and 2nd issue of National Savings Certificates, the bonus for 1987 is to be fixed at 4 per cent, which will be paid in addition to the 3 per cent bonus due on August 1, 1986.

Disappointment for junior investors and all those nontaxpayers with money in Nainterest rate is being cut from 11.5 per cent (paid without deduction of tax) to 10.75 per cent from June 10.

At the new rate the after-tax return to the basic-rate taxpayer works out at 7.63 per cent, no better than the return from a building society extra interest account and just as likely to be cut if interest rates fall further. INVAC is really only suitable for non-taxpayers. Ironically, National Savings is

Many old people will have money in National Savings income and deposit bonds and the interest rates here are to come down from 12 per cent to 11.5 per cent on July 1). To the basic-rate taxpayer, this is equivalent to an after-tax return of 8.16 per cent: just about comparable to a good building-society. extra-inter-est account but not nearly so

You are effectively locked into income and deposit bonds for a minimum of 12 months as you receive only half the quoted interest if you cash in during the first year. You also have to give three months' notice of withdrawal. Notwithstanding, the maximum investment limits on income and deposit bonds have been increased from

Eight per cent tax-free on big investments

£50,000 to £100,000 as from Friday May 30.

One thing stands out from the changes, that higher-rate taxpayers would be well advised to buy the maximum amount of savings certificates not just the current issue but subsequent issues, too.

Gone are the days when National Savings traded on investors' apathy and were able to get away with paying uncompetitive rates. Higherrate taxpayers can build up a good holding in National Savings certificates and could now be earning an average of 8 per cent tax-free on investments running into many thousands.

An investor paying tax at the top rate of 60 per cent would have to see a before tax return of 20 per cent to be left with a net return of 8 per cent. The only way to achieve this would be to invest in equities with all the attendant risks involved. Savings Certificates offer a guaranteed tax-free return and complete security for your money.

is the short answer. Kleinwort Benson has introduced a credit facility which has introduced a credit facility which will enable those who want to take some of the value out of their houses without having to go to the trouble of a complete re-mortgage. The Flexible Loan Account is relatively cheap credit (at 12 per cent it's roughly half what you pay on Access or Barclaycard). But to be eligible for the loan facility you have to have an income of £20,000 and above or a net worth of £50,000 or above, or a net worth of £50,000 or more. The loan facility, of at least £20,000, is secured against the borrower's property. Interest is only charged when a slice of the loan facility is used. facility is used, and borrowers can decide when and if they will make repayments until 90 per cent of the facility is used. At that stage monthly payments will be required, making the loan facility look like a second mortgage. Raising public awareness is one of those turnoff phrases left over from the 1960s. Nevertheless, that is exactly what the newly formed Money Management Council intends to do about how we all handle our money — and they plan to catch our children as well.

.The council's director. Jetemy Leighton, says re-search has shown that primary school children are sadly lacking in financial knowhow.

"The secondary schools have some good teaching materials aimed at developing money management skills. But there is little going on in primary schools to teach primary schools to teach younger children the basic money sense they will need if they are going to have money to manage later."

And if this sounds preposterous to those of us whose youngsters are forever demanding more pocket money, then Mr Leighton points out that times have changed.

Despite the inflationary seventies when it was actually a good idea to buy as much on credit as possible, many of us still have the old attitude "if you can't afford it, then wait until you can."

This approach was perfectly acceptable in an age when people kept their money in the people kept their money in the post office or under the mat-ress. But it sits strangely in a Citizens' Advice Bureaux society where 60 per cent of us are home owners - and most of those homes are mortgaged - and where many of us are likely to be shareholders in major institutions like British

It will be in a position to attract money for special projects and Jeremy Leighton says that several large compa-nies have already made it clear that they want to help. So although the primary school consciousness-raising exercise is not yet under way, there should be no difficulty in financing it.

The council has also been asked to set up a stand at the Money '86 exhibition, held at Olympia in November.

Mr Leighton explained: "The first of these exhibitions was held last year, and the people selling specialised products like unit trusts were nonplussed by the number of very general inquiries they received about things like endowment versus repayment mortgages.

"It was obvious to the exhibition organisers that there was a need for someone to meet this demand for very general information about finance." The council will also be organising seminars for the people running specialised stands about how best to put over information to the

Mr Leighton stressed that although some parallels could be made between the role of his council and the National Consumer Council, these were limited.

"We are not setting ourselves up as angels in a forest of demons. We want to be positive about money management. But we hope we will grow into an influential body, and take a campaigning atti-tude on issues over which we felt very strongly. But it is early days at the moment."

· TAXATION

The Chancellor's Budget proposals for the reform of taxation of husband and wife seem to have found favour virtually nowhere. The latest critical review comes from the authoritative Institute for Fiscal Studies, which says the proposals are totally unrealistic since the cost of imple-menting them as they stand would be around £4,500

What the Chancellor proposed in his Green Paper was that everyone should have a gie person's allowance, but in the case of a married couple any unused portion of the personal allowance could be transferred to the spouse. This would mean that couples where the wife does not work would be able to make use of two single personal allowances - a higher figure than the married man's allowance. The IFS however favours recommendation contained in the 1981 Green Paper on the taxation of husband and wife. This was that the married man's allowance would be abolished, couples would have independent, nontransferable allowances, and the money saved would be used to boost child benefit and benefits for the disabled and those who look after them. The virtue of this solution is that it can be done on a no-cost basis and the extra benefits go to those families with children and elderly dependants - the families most in need. On a no-cost basis, the IFS estimates that the abolition of the married man's

Alternatively, the IFS suggests that independent non-transferable allowances, but would allow the Chancellor to cut the basic rate of tax from 29 per cent to 22 per cent and give everyone a 10 per cent higher single person's tax allowance.

This would probably be politically unacceptable since

Reforms urged to help couples

families with children, and married couples where only one partner works, would be worse off through the loss of the married man's allowance. The Chancellor could however compensate families on a no-cost basis by increasing child benefit but making it taxable. There is, in any case, little point in handing out a tax-free benefit to families rich enough to be paying tax at

The largest gripe from married couples is that a wife cannot offset the wife's earned income allowance against any no increase in child benefit, investment income she might have, because the allowance is, as its name implies, offsettable only against "earned" income.

A single woman does not have this problem as the single person's allowance can be offset against investment income. Many elderly widows would dearly like to remarry but often cannot afford to since they are living off invest-ment income and would be worse off married.

It would be a simple matter to change the wife's earned income allowance and give the married woman a single person's allowance which could be used against investment income.

To make matters worse, the wife's investment income is always treated as being the income of her spouse and tax is paid on it at her bushand's ighest rate. However, the Treasury might be reluctant to make these changes since the cost is difficult to estimate. It is not known how many husbands have investments which they would be willing and able to transfer to their wives to take advantage of the extra tax

Gilt-edged guide to the mysteries of the unit trust

The Government is keen to promote wider share ownership and turn us all into mini-capitalists. But for the small investor, there is no doubt that the unit trust is the ideal vehicle for investing in shares.

One of the main obstacles to buying unit trusts, however, is that the vast majority of potential investors do not know what they are, and even if they did, would not be able to understand whether they were performing well or badly. The industry has never really gone out of its way to explain itself to the unitiated.

So what is a unit trust and why is it a good thing? A unit trust is a fund in which small investors' money is pooled

The irony of it all is that unit trusts are thought of in the investment industry as being particularly uncompli-cated animals. A unit price will not be so affected by the more technical factors which make share prices jump around, and they are simpler to buy and sell. FRAMLINGTON

FUND

An All-Out Capital Growth Investment for You

ramlington European Fund aims for maximum capital growth through investment in shares quoted on the principal European stock markets.

Europe is now one of the most popular areas for investment. But it is a diverse and complex market: for investment success strong links with the continent are highly desirable. Framlington's are with Crédit Commercial de France, enabling us to combine CCF's expertise and knowledge of the European market with our own eminently effective approach to long term capital growth.

THE FRAMLINGTON APPROACH

Our special style is to concentrate on smaller companies and try to identify those with really good growth prospects before the rest of the market recognises their promise, aiming for exceptional capital growth performance.

The results of this bave been good, especially over the long term.

OUR RECORD

The two previous Framlington funds which have most closely followed this approach have been Capital Trust, investing in U.K. shares; and American and General Fund, investing in the U.S.A. Both have done well.

Over the ten years to 1st April Framlington Capital Trust was the very best performing of all the 275 unit trusts monitored by Money Management over the period. It turned an original investment of £1,000 into £11,150.

And over seven years, our American & General Fund (started 1978) was one of the two best performing unit trusts out of the 27 investing in North American shares. It rurned £1.000 into £3,639.

OUR EUROPEAN LINK The manager of the fund is Philippe Herault, who has been seconded from Crédit Commercial de France. He is our link into CCF's research, while working in London with the other Framlington fund managers.

The fund will have a bias towards smaller companies: it is, for example, authorised to invest in the French Second Marché.

In geographical terms the current emphasis of investment is on France (34 per cent), Germany (13 per cent) and Switzerland (14 per cent) with smaller holdings in Sweden, Italy. Holland, Spain and Belgium. There is currently a substantial flow of new money into the fund. As this is invested, the proportions will change. In particular, the proportion invested in Germany is likely to be increased. The fund has powers to invest in Britain but will not do so for

LUMP SUM INVESTMENT

You can make a lump sum investment simply by completing the form below and sending it to us with your cheque. Units are allocated at the price ruling when we receive your order. The minimum investment for a lump sum is £500. There is a discount of 1 per cent for investments of £10,000 or more.

MONTHLY SAVINGS PLAN

tarting a monthly savings plan is equally easy. The minimum is £20 per month, with a discount of 1 per cent for contributions of £100 or more. Accumulation units are used and are allocated at the price ruling on the 5th of each month. To start your plan, complete the application and send it with your cheque for the first contribution. Subsequent contributions are by the direct debit mandate which we shall send to you for your signature.

in Framlington European Fund

Investors should regard all unit trust investment as long term. They are reminded that the price of units and the income from them can go down as well as up.

By 22nd May the price of units had risen 16.8 per cent to 58.4p, compared with 50.0p when the fund was launched on February 14. The estimated gross yield was 0.90 per cent.

GENERAL INFORMATION

Applications will be acknowledged; certificates for lump-sum investments will be sent by the registrars, Lloyds Bank Pic, normally within 42 days.

The minimum initial investment is 4500. Units may be bought and sold daily. Prices and yields will be published daily in leading newspapers. When units are sold back to the managers payment is normally made within 7 days of receipt of the renounced certificate. Savings plans can be cashed in at any time.

Income net of basic rate tax is distributed to holders of income units annually on 15 July. The first distribution will be on 15 July, 1987.

The annual charge is 1% (+VAT) of the value of the fund. The initial charge, which is included in the offer price, is 5%. Commission is paid to qualified intermediaries at the rate of 144% (plus VAT). Commission is not paid on savings plans.

The trust is an authorised unit trust constituted by Trust Deed. It ranks as a wider range security under the Trustee Investments Act, 1961. The Trustee is Lloyds Bank Plc. Throw away the Dostoyevsky. Keep Gogol in reserve for a little light relief. If you really want a depressing read, try Blay's Guide to Domestic Rates. If you live in a shire council your rates will have risen by 17.8 per cent on average, while ratepayers in Buckinghamshire, Cambridgeshire and Cumbria all have to pay 30 per cent mo this year than they did last.

According to Donald Black, managing director of Blay's. The overall picture is grim. The fact is that rate bills are now a major item for all householders and in many cases they now exceed mortgage payments."

The average increase in England works out at 16.72 per cent, with Welsh rates up 12.9 per cent, and Scotland charging a more thrifty 8.42 per cent extra. What has happened to the supposed clampdown on rates? Where have all the rate caps gone, and why did the Government bother to wage war on the urban councils to try to make them curb their spending?

In fact the Tories' chief target, the London boroughs, have actually reduced their rates by an average 3.34 per cent. But there are wide disparities between the boroughs. For example, Bromley rates are levied at 134.5p in the pound, while householders in nearby Lewisham have to find 232.9p for every pound

Mr Black says: "The presen system penalizes elderly peo-ple living alone, and those living in depressed areas. Businesses which might otherwise start up or continue operations in areas of high unemployment are packing up

A Green Paper for discussion of rates reform was published by the Government this January. The main proposal is that in addition to the present rating system a comnumity charge, or residents' tax be payable. Current rates would be frozen and, allowing should be negligible by the end of the century.

The new system, if approved, would not come into force before 1990, well after the next General Election. Mr Black believes the proposals offer a better alternative to the existing complicated structure of rebates and subsidies.

Beware, the most respectable of cheques may be a forgery

Bank drafts and building soci-ety cheques might not be as good as gold but for years people have been happy to accept them without question. It came as little consolation

Mr Hemingway's personal advice is that "I would never dream of handing over a car in return for a cheque unless knew the person concerned."

Such words of warning are echoed by Mr Townley, Barclays, and, of course, Mr Stanborough, none of whom would sell goods without first clearing a draft or building society cheque.

Only gold beats houses investment than the family home, according to recent figures compiled by Nation-wide Building Society. The Nationwide says: "Except for the short term (five years), buying a house with the aid of a mortgage has provided average gross and net rates of return which are into double figures — consistently exceed-ing the rate of inflation.

If the notional rental value of living in the house is taken into account the net rate of return is considerably increased, taking it to 25 per cent a year in the case of a house bought 15 years ago." The survey compares the most popular forms of invest-ment — building society accounts, bank deposits, unit trusts, National Savings Cer-tificates, shares and gold.

"The raw average annual increase in house prices is at its lowest for the period 1980-85 and peaks at over 14 per cent for the 15-year period 1970-85, a span which covers both of the house price booms of the 1970s," says the Nationwide. "When transaction and mattered cents are taken and mortgage costs are taken into consideration the same pattern emerges but with a much greater range. The sig-nificance of transaction costs

is clearly illustrated by the five years while for houses bought before 1970 the rate of return is improved by borrow ing on mortgage. This is because the average annual rise in house prices exceeds the average mortgage interest rate over the given period."

"Comparisons with other forms of investment show that for the periods of 15 years or more the return on housing with a mortgage is exceeded only by that on gold, a medium which is used by few investors. Over the shorter term the transaction and mortgage costs have a greater effect and housing as an investment fares relatively poorty."

How objective is your advice on insurance?

If you are buying a life insurance policy or unit trust from an intermediary how sure can you be that he or she is recommending the most suitable product for you, rather than being influenced by the amount of commission or other rewards the intermediary is getting?

The answer is that at present it is difficult to find this out. But the problem has been taxing the Marketing of Investments Board Organizing Committee (Miboc). It has been laying down principles and rules aimed at ensuring that the advice you receive is genuinely independent and the most suitable for you rather than for the pocket of

MIBOC has therefore said that when the Financial Services Bill becomes law and the rules it is formulating under the terms of the Bill are formally introduced, various forms of incentives which life companies and friendly societies pay to intermediaries will be outlawed.

A common form of incentive is the volume overrider. Some life companies will pay intermediaries bonus commission if they achieve a certain level of sales of their policies.

Other life companies offer incentives to sell their policies such as free trips abroad, or gifts, such as free installation of car phones.

The reason for outlawing arrangements of this nature is clear. Volume overriders, as Miboc has pointed out are fundamentally incompatible with the provision of impar-tial advice. The same is true of the other forms of

It could be helpful to know of some of the deals on offer to intermediaries. It should give a clearer picture of the independence intermediarie's advice.

For instance your intermediary may be attempting to sell you one of the two products on the market from Family Assurance: the New Family Bond and the Total Investment Plan.

These could turn out to be very good investments, but bear in mind that Family Assurance has just introduced a promotional scheme whereby for each policy sold the intermediary gets a ticket for a prize draw. The more policies sold, the greater the chance in the draw.

The prizes are two sets of two places – for the interme-diary and his wife – on the Family Assurance sales

This might not seem a great incentive to sell Family Assurance policies. The sales convention is however to be held in the Bahamas for seven days in December.

Keith Sankey, marketing director of Family Assurance. denies that the incentive scheme is a last-ditch marketing effort to beat the Miboc

He says: We want to stimulate sales for 1986, this is not a new idea." He admits the incentive scheme could colour the judgement of the intermediary but says: " feel we have fairly good products anyway".

As for the Bahamas sales convention, it will not be all fun and games for the intermediaries. There will be representatives from FA there and, Mr Sankey says "the intermediaries will be discussing Family Assurance and its scale ending up with the lucky intermediary getting 25 per cent bonus for sales commission earned above £22,500. This works out at a £5,625

Peter Kelly of Albany says that the company has always paid volume bonuses and "in any event our commissions are not as high as some other life companies".

Cornhill Insurance says that it is abandoning its biannual dinner for intermediaries selling their policies. It operates a prize draw at the dinners again issuing draw tickets with each policy sold, thereby increasing the intermediaries chances in the draw.

Perhaps it was your broker who won last year's star prize

Signs are that some companies are simply bumping up their commission rates for intermediaries, in advance of the introduction of provisions which will effectively require the disclosure of excessive or above average commission.

Sources in the intermediary market say that Abbey Life is offering an alarming 150 to 180 per cent of the first year's premiums in commission on its unit-linked whole of life

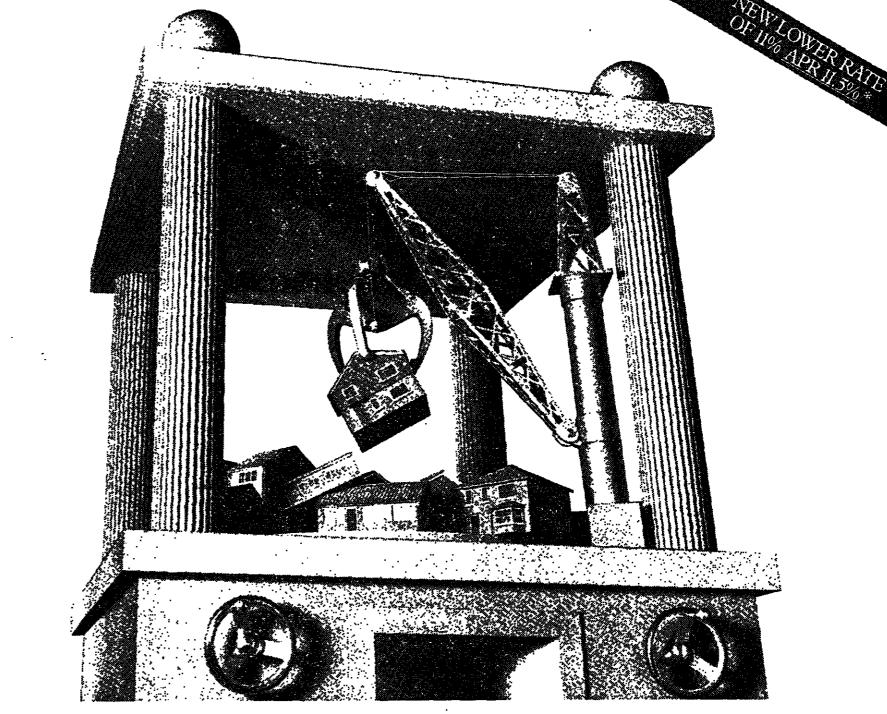

This means that the lion's share of the first two years' premiums which you pay into the Abbey Life policy goes straight into the straight into the intermediary's pocket, rather than as an investment for the future. Premiums of this level are well out of line with the industry average.

According to my sources, these are deals which Abbey has negotiated with individual intermediary firms, as opposed to making them generally available.

David Baggaley, finance di-rector of Abbey Life, says that in January the company re-duced the level of business intermediaries had to do in order to qualify for an overrider. He denies however that the company is paying commissions of between 150 and 180 per cent.

Mr Baggaley said: "This is way out of line, with what we pay. I can not tell you how much we do pay because it is not our policy to quote

The banks themselves say not. It's not that we don't want the extra money, it is simply that we are used to not receiving interest on current account so we have learned not to expect it.

"Our research shows that there really isn't much demand. We're some way from paying interest on current accounts", says Stuart Ranson, UK retail banking services chief at Lloyds Bank.

At first blush his statement strains credulity. accounts which do bear interest. The high street banks all have "high interest" accounts, as do a variety of other financial institutions ranging from Save & Prosper to American banks like Citibank Savings. But most of them have restrictions — minimum investments, no overdraft fawithdrawals - which make it quite unlike an everyday cheque account. Barclays, for example, has a minimum opening deposit of £2,500; each cheque must be for at least £250, and costs 50 pence after the first six in every quarter. Lloyds is closest to an ordinary cheque account with interest; cheques of any size can be written, but only the first three entries per quarter are free, and the minimum

The upshot is that for a very small credit balance on a busy account you might find yourself paying out more in charges than you would re-ceive in after-tax interest. In Target Japan Fund, this investment would have grown to over £1,400.

AN ENCOURAGING OUTLOOK In the future, we consider Japan will continue to be a favourable area for investment. Recent developments lead us to the conclusion that the huge potential of the domestic sector could be the major influence on the Japanese stockmarket this year.

The important arguments for this view include:

- The dramatic fall in oil prices. Japan is heavily dependant upon imported oil and, as such, stands to benefit considerably from the halving in prices seen this year.
- The 30+ percentage rise in the value of the Yen against the Dollar. Since the 'Group of Five' meeting last September the rise in the value of the Yen has enabled a significant reduction in interest rates.

We believe this will benefit the economy and help encourage investment in the stockmarket.

• The Japanese Government intends to stimulate the economy through a variety of measures. Legislation on urban redevelopment and the bringing forward of many key construction projects should lead to stronger growth. The projected rise in real earnings should create a more buoyant consumer sector.

 Deregulation of the financial system is taking on increasing importance. The Japanese authorities have shown their intentions to develop Tokyo as a world financial centre equal to London and New York.

Little help for those who have had big losses

Proposals to safeguard investors money if their fi-nancial advisers go bust have been put forward by the Securities and Investments Board. The board hopes that its suggestions — to keep investors' money separately, on trust, so that it is safe from the firms' creditors - will be incorporated into the Financial Services Bill.

But these proposals for the future provide fittle consolation to those who have already suffered substantial losses at the hands of their financial advisers. In 1981, hundreds of investors lost a total of more than £5 million — some, their entire life savings — with the collapse of investment advisers Norton Warburg, Five years on, some of those investors have still not received any of their money back. And for two of them, the failure of the company was only the begin-ning of their problems. When Pat Myant's husband was paralysed in a car accident,he received £82,000 compensation, which they gave to Norton Warburg to invest on their behalf. By 1979 Mrs Myant had handed over to the company another £172,000, including the money she had received on her husband's death.

Norton Warburg now had all her savings and Mrs Myant went off to Venice having left strict instructions with the company that she did not want any of her money invested in risk ventures. That was the last she saw of her life savings. The first she was when she read a newspaper report that the company had collapsed. She has still not been repaid any of her money and is proposed. of her money, and is virtually

"I have now seen a list of what Norton Warburg did with my money. It is heartbreaking. They bought travel tickets for £1,300, they paid a doctor's tax bill of £5,500, they gave some woman £26,000, and another person whom I had never heard of £13,300, all with my money.

The whole business of having the bill taxed was rather daunting. but in my case it was absolutely worthwhile."

Five years after the Norton Warburg failure, Jane Davies also has not received back any of the money she lost. Like Pat Myant she has had a constant battle trying to obtain infor-mation on what happened to the missing funds. "Whichever way I turn, it's like a brick wall with the Director of Public Prosecutions and the Fraud Squad. I feel that the avenues of justice open to me have been effectively blocked. I feel badly let down by British justice. A company can take all your money and seemingly

Perhaps the final comment on the plight of investors who lose their savings should come from Pat Mynant. "If we had been mugged, I am sure that the offenders would have been brought to justice by now. I only hope that the directors of Norton Warburg know how much misery they have

ANTIQUES

The highlight of the world's most important antiques fair - to be opened this year by Princess Margaret at Grosvenor House on June 11 - is to be the Cartier Display. It is on loan from Cartier's Museum in Geneva and from private collectors and members of the Cartier family. None of the exhibits, however, is for sale. The fair takes place in the Great Room of Grosvenor House, where 89 members of the British Antiques Dealers Association will be showing some of the finest authenticated pieces they have been able to muster. There is demand for ironstone and high quality Regency porce-lain cabinet pieces, dinner, dessert and tea services made during the first quarter of 19th century. GENERAL INFORMATION

If you had taken the opportunity to invest £10,000 in the Wardley Japan Growth Trust when it was launched in October 1982 you would have seen your money grow to a staggering $42,160 (by 28th May). That's a growth of 321.6% in under four years. Have your investments performed as well over this period?

Now we are offering you the opportunity to invest in this high performing Unit Trust directly off this page.

Wardley's consistently outstanding investment record

The superb performance of the Wardiev Japan Growth Trust is not an 'overnight wonder'. Units have shown a dramatic increase in value of over four times since the Fund's launch in September 1982.

This remarkable investment performance is increasingly being accepted by serious investors as par for the course for Wardley Unit Trusts. The Wardley International Growth Trust has grown in value by 58% * since its relaunch in November 1985, and the Wardley European Growth Trust has increased in value by 100% since it was launched in January 1985.

How do Wardley do it? The answer is simple. Wardley's professional team of expert advisers work exceptionally hard in analysing, interpreting, and forecasting market movements. Our Japan Growth Trust is actually advised by our Fund Management team in their Tokyo Office. They are 'on the spot' to take advantage of investment opportunities as and when they arise.

In fact, although the Nikkei-Dow index has itself grown rapidly over the last four years, it has been consistently beaten by the Wardley Japan Growth

Calculated on an offer to bid basis to 28th May 1986

Will the Wardley Japan Growth Trust maintain its growth performance? We believe that future prospects for continued growth from this Fund look excellent. As the Japanese economy continues to flourish, selective investment opportunities are likely to be found in companies with household names such as Sony, Honda, JVC, Casio, Nikon and Toshiba.

Of course, this rate of growth cannot be guaranteed to continue, and the value of the units and the income from them can godown aswellasup.

How you could cut your school fees costs by 82%.

The Equitable has recently had an Educational Trust established (with all the tax advantages of charitable status), that's designed to save you thousands of pounds on public school fees.

For example, a single contribution of £8.467.08 could, after 10 years, provide £48,852 worth of school fees* in total over the following 7 years.

At a saving of 82%.

Or you may prefer to spread the cost by making regular contributions. Either way, if you're thinking of putting your child's name down for public school, put his name down for an equitable School Fee Trust Plan. Cut out the coupon or phone 01-606 6611 for details.

Miss Parker's main sub-missions were that the statutory requirements of confidentiality (see regulation 14(1) of the Adoption Agency Regulations (SI 1983 No 1964)) placed the information available to the adoption society's officers and the records of that society in the category of information pro-tected by public interest immu-nity, and that there was an analogy between information provided by a putative father to an adoption agency and information given by such per-sons as informants of the police or informants of the Customs and Excise. Miss Parker's main sub-

His Lordship said that a natural father had much to gain financially if the burden of maintenance was lifted from his shoulders by adoption if that was the course contemplated, so that it could not be envisaged that such a person was dis-suaded from admitting parentage to an adoption agency because he knew that if he changed his mind and turned dishonest what he was then saying might be used against him. Thus, there was no acceptable analogy between his position and informants.

agency, for an order of certiorars to quash the witness summons issued by the Bournemouth Justices, dated August 15, 1985, requiring his attendance in affiliation proceedings to be heard before them between Anita Rodd and Robert Weaver. Miss Rodd also applied for On the question of public interest immunity, it was clear from D v National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children (1978) AC 171) that it could be raised otherwise than certiorari to quash the summons and mandamus directed to the justices to issue the summons to Mr Grey not only to attend to give evidence but also to produce a document. could be raised otherwise than by and in a case involving the Miss Judith Parker for the

summons could be issued

Where an employee had worked intermittently in an irregular pattern over a number of years, an industrial tribunal ought to have regard to all the circumstances over the whole period of employment in ascertaining, under paragraph 9(1)(b) of Schedule 13 to the Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978, whether the breaks in the two years prior to dismissal were temporary.

It was not correct simply to look at each break in relation to the adjoining periods of employment or to apply a mathematical formula in determining whether there had been continuity of employment for the two-year period required by section 81 of the 1978 Act.

the 1978 Act.

The Court of Appeal so held, dismissing an appeal by the employers, Kodak Ltd, from the decision of the Employment Appeal Tribunal (Mr Justice Peter Gibson, Mr H. Robson and Miss A. P. Vale), who on July 30, 1985 (1985) ICR 820) allowed an appeal by Jacqueline Flack and five other employees from the decision of the industrial tribunal on September 17, 1984, that they were not eligible to redundancy payments because they had not been continuously employed for two years.

Mr Alexander Irvine, QC and Mr Michael Supperstone for the employers; Mr Patrick Elias for the employees.

THE MASTER OF THE ROLLS, concurring with the judgments of Lord Justice Woolf and Lord Justice Parker, said that in reliance on the speech of Lord Diplock in Ford v Warwickshire County Council [1983] 2 AC 71, 83) the industrial tribunal had sought to determine whether each break in the employment of each employee during the two wars employee during the two years prior to their dismissal could be characterized as short relatively to the combined dura-tion of the two adjoining periods of employment.

In so doing, they had expressed the relationship between each break and its adjoining periods of employment as a percentage of the combined duration of those periods of employment.

The trap into which the tribunal fell, as other courts had done before them, was to regard speeches in the House of Lords as having the force and purpose of statute law and to pay insufficient regard to the context speeches were delivered.

Continuity of employment for the purposes of the 1978 Act, with consequential rights to redundancy payments and compensation for unfair dismissal, was of considerable importance to employees.

Actual continuity of employment was often an unachievable short-time working or tem-porary lay-offs. The Act sought to extend the factual concept of continuity of employment to cover situations which might otherwise lead to a finding that continuity had been goal due to sickness, injury,

Under section 151, the issue whether the intermittent periods of employment were to be treated as forming a single period of continuous employment fell to be determined in From paragraph 9(1), which was crucial, two points emerged.

First, the unit of employment was the week.
It followed that the tribunal had erred in approaching the matter on the basis of days, rather than weeks.
Second, what had to be considered was not a temporary absence from work caused by a cessation of work, but an ab-sence from work caused by a sence from work caused by a temporary cessation of work.

The leading authority on paragraph 9 was not Ford's case, but Fitzgerald v Hall, Russell & Co Ltd (1970) AC 984). There, the House of Lords decided that the "work" referred to in paragraph 9 was that of the employee.

graph 9 was that of the employee and not the employer, and that "temporary" necessarily in-volved questions of fact and teacher employed on a long series of fixed-term contracts. The question whether the breaks in employment were temporary had not been in issue. The issue had been whether it mattered that those periods had been bounded by fixed-term contracts, and it had been held that it did not.

The matter should be remit-ted to the industrial tribunal for reconsideration in the light of their Lordships' judgments and of the decision of the House of Lords in Fuzgerald's case rather than Ford's.

The tribunal should bear in mind that while the only breaks in employment which were relevant to the issue of redun-dancy were those which occurred during the two years immediately prior to dismissal, the characterization of those breaks as temporary or otherwise might be affected by the whole history of the employment. Solicitors: Bristows, Cooke & Carpmael; Pattinson & Brew

After a promising pipe-opener in Sandown's Esher Cup. Sylvan Express reappeared at Newmarket on 2,000 Guineas day and under the strong driving of the promising apprentice, Gary Carter, outpaced a competitive field for the seven-furlong Ladbrokes Handicap.

The form of that race has worked out particularly well, with the runner-up, Fleei Form, going on to land the valuable Norwest Holst Trophy at York, and the fourth and fifth placed horses. Native Oak and Wesham, also scoring since.

Certainly, his charge is still leniently handicapped, having been raised only 4lb for the Newmarket success, and the one reservation is that the Baptism colt now tackles six furlongs against some seasoned sprinters, such as Luna Bid and Roaring Riva.

Those two rivals, however, have plenty of weight, and a bigger danger to my selection lurks near the bottom of the handicap, the Lester Piggotttrained Latch String, who opened her account by catching Glikiaa Mou in the last few strides at Thirsk. But Sylvan Express is napped to complete

Bakharoff back Experience in betting as Starkey denies Derby switch

Bakharoff, last year's leading two-year-old, may after all fin in the Derby on Wednesday. Greville Starkey, stable treaks to Guy Henry after he had jockey to Guy Harwood, who also has Dancing Brave and Allez Milord in the race, said at Newmarket yesterday; "I understand that Bakharoff may be allowed to take his chance instead of going to Chantilly for the French Derby.

Starkey denied that he would switch from the 2,000 Guineas winner, Dancing Brave, who has drifted signifi-cantly in the ante-post betting over the last few days. Harwood is expected to decide on his big race plans over the weekend and issue a statement tomorrow. Corais offer 11-2 against Bakharoff with a run.

Harwood's assistant, Geoff Lawson, said later: "Dancing Brave is in tremendous form and Bakharoff worked very well this morning. I would not be surprised if all our three entries ran on Wednesday". John Winter will take Naturally Fresh to Royal Ascot believing he has the best of the home contenders for the 10st.

That was the Newmarket trainer's view after he had saddled Guy Shropshire's filly to record another impressive victory in the Exning Church Anniversary Stakes at Head-quarters where five out of six favourites were successful.

Walter Swinburn, who had scored a seven length win on Naturally Fresh on the Row-ley Course early in the month, again out those tactics to good effect as the 13-8 on shot scored by a comfortable three lengths from Jaisalmer, who ran on when the others had cried enough.

Naturally Fresh, bred by Pat Watts, the wife of the Richmond trainer, Bill, was acquired for the Cambridgeshire owner as a yearling for 6,000 guineas, having fetched 30,000 guineas as a foal. She's fast and has a lovely Pat Eddery was seen at his brilliant best on the Queen's six-year-old, Insular, who landed the Thurlow Handicap

tells in Whitaker's victory

By Jenny MacArthur

Experience triumphed at Hickstead yesterday when the 18-year-old Next Ryan's Son, ridden by John Whitaker, won the Everest Double Glazing Trophy and the 17-year-old Owen Gregory, ridden by Whitaker's younger brother, Michael, was second. John Whitaker is considering whether to jump Ryan's Son rather than Milton in tomorrow's Nations Cup, but the decision will be made by Ronnie Massarella, the team manager, who announces made by Ronnie Massarella, the team manager, who announces his team of four today.

The Hickstead arena is a favourite stamping ground for both Ryan's Son and Owen Gregory. The latter, owned by Mrs Raymond Fenwick, won the Jumping Derby in 1980.

Ryan's Son, who has won more than £200,000 during his career, won the Jumping Derby in 1983, having earlier in the year won his rider the European individual silver medal in the same arena. same arena.

Yesterday it looked as if it was going to be a duel between the two brothers until last year's winner. Emile Hendrix, of The Netherlands, on Optiebeurs Een, made it a three-horse jump-off.

The main problems on the long and testing first round were fence two, a big spread coming after a short turn in from fence one, and a double of narrow stiles, which came immediately after a big parallel. Harvey Smith on Sanyo Cadnica were among the victims. He was officially eliminated after failing to salute the judges before the start of his round but Smith start of his round but Smith came out of the ring maintaining that he had retired after having two feuces down.

Michael Whitaker, going first in the jump-off, set a good time on Owen Gregory, but hit the first part of the double of stiles. His brother decided to take a gamble and go for a slowish clear. "The flinsty poles on the stiles and the planks in the combination santed Ryan, I knew I just had to be careful," he said. He was almost too careful, said. He was almost too careful, incurring one time penalty but no jumping faults.

Hendrix had no alternative but to go for it. He took the vertical sence three at a daring angle and was looking threatening until be, too, was caught out at the double, giving victory to Hickstead's favourite son. Whitaker said afterwards that whitaker said afterwards that he would continue jumping Ryan's Son as long as the horse retains his enthusiasm. "He is quiet as a lamb at home but gets excited as soon as he sees crowds," Whitaker said. Later Whitaker took third

smacks of class

By Mitchell Platts

Baiocchi's surprisingly hopes

Baiocchi has 16 professional victories to his credit, six of them in Europe, but he has one infuriating flaw in his character.

He lacks the belief at the age of 39 that he is still able to

It would seem difficult to believe that Baiocchi is a disciple of the power of positive thinking. However, he claimed: "I believe very strongly in the strength of the power of the mind. I had eight sessions with Woolf Solomon, a sports psychologist in South Africa, last month and I have also read many books on the subject."

many books on the subject."
Baiocchi is one of golf's nice guys and he would be a worthy winner of any tournament. He was certainly in control through-out the second round which he began with a flourish at the third

(480) yards) where he struck a four-iron to six feet from the hole. He nursed the ball home from there for an eagle three and he went on to complete what he regarded was one of the best rounds he has played for a long, long time.

Antonio Garrido, of Spain put together a 67 to move into the lead with Baiocchi and José-

Maria Olazabal (68), of Spain.

Britons well-set to shoot for overall victory

By John Wilcockson

British riders took a strange-hold on the Milk Race yesterday when Neil Martin of the Bilton-Condor team outsprinted 16 others to win the fifth stage. Martin arrived in Chester three minutes ahead of the main field along with 10 other. Berich Watson had fallen with the winner of the two previous stages, Djamolodine Abdujaparov; but whereas the Soviet rider remounted and finished with the main group, Watson, who was third in the 1985 Milk Race, had to stop to change a damaged wheel Abdujaparov and his three colleagues led the chase and pegged the break to a 40 second advantage until Buxton, but the gap extended to 2 minutes on the long haul to the Cat and Fiddle inn.

"I've never dreamed of winning a British Open," Hugh Baiocchi said. "If I was four shots ahead with one hole to play I would probably fall over and break a leg! You have to be realistic, you don't stumble into an Open ... you have to win it from a guy like Seve Ballesteros." along with 10 other British riders.

Although Pyotr Ugrumov retained the race leadership, he was the only Soviet rider in the break and his overall advantage of Seer over Malcolm Elliger of Batocchi's surprisingly honest confession was delivered only a few minutes after he had joyously walked off the 18th green at Moor Park yesterday after completing a flawless round of 65 which contained five birdies and one eagle. of 8sec over Malcolm Elliott, of ANC-Halfords, is no guarantee of success. It was a performance that smacked of class as he threaded his way towards the prospect of winning the London Standard Four Stars National Pro-Celebrity tournament. As the front-runners regrouped on the narrow road. Watson turned to see what damage had been done by the climb. Jeff Williams, his team colleague, said: "As Paul turned to look, he touched wheels with one of the Russians and fell. That is what sparked the break.

If they go through, they could then meet Old Wykehamists, who were put out in the semi-final in 1985 by the Oundellians. Little support for boards By John Goodbody

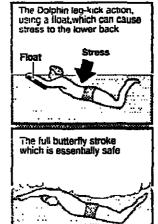

Swimming, usually the active sport most free from injuries, is sport most free from injuries, is concerned by a report on lower hack pains suffered by butterfly competitors. Professor Taffy Cameron, the medical adviser to the Amateur Swimming Association, has examined more than 50 swimmers with sore lower backs over the last five years at the London Hospital and only 10 did not use butterfly as their main stroke. In a report to FINA, the Inter-national Federation, Professor national Federation, Professor Cameron and his co-authors traced the probable cause of the injury to using the undulating dolphin leg action while holding a float board in training. This has led to impending stress fractures.

Many of the swimmers in today's Commonwealth Games trials at Coventry use boards in training, sometimes for several miles 2 day. By fixing their shoulders, there is a greater degree of energy used in the region of the lumbo-sacral joint than in the full stroke when the onlders and arms come out of the water.

The report notes that where hand-held floats are rarely used in training there is a zero incidence, of back problems; or back is intrin-

Cowley ruled out of Games for England

Annette Cowley, the South African swimmer, has had her hopes dashed of representing England in the Commonwealth Games in Edinburgh. Miss Cowley, aged 19, is competing in the national long-course championships and Games trials in Coventry, But David Reeves, the England secretary, admitted that the Amate Swimming Association had made a mistake in telling Miss Cowley she would be able to compete for England.

Miss Cowley, who is based at the University of Texas, has fallen foul of a Games residency rule which could also bar the South African-born athlete, Zola Budd, from the Games.

Recves confirmed her Games exclusion after consultation with Dick Palmer, general secretary to the Commonwealth Games Council for England. He said: "She does not answer the residential regulations — she must live in England for six of the previous 12 months." Miss Cowley holds a British passport but does not qualify because she-was not born in England, nor she is eligible to compete for

Great Britain in the world championships in Madrid in August. Reeves admitted: "I did indicate to Keith Bewley, her coach at Wigan, that it appeared that she was eligible. I can only offer her an apology."

Miss Cowley set the fastest 100-metres freestyle time of the year on her debut for the English club, Wigan Wasps. Reeves will recommend that her performance at the Hewlett-Packard championships be given consideration for selec-tion for Madrid.

But Reeves said: "I will recommend for her times to be considered. That takes a little bit of the sting out of the situation."

Jan Molby arrived to join the Danish squad preparing for the World Cup in Bogota and told Sepp Piontek, the Danish manager, that he was exhausted. A season of English industrial football had expended his vitality. His frank admission is more sobering for England than it is even for the Danes. Vitality will help determine who wins these thirteenth World Cup finals which begin today against a background of thousands living in tents following last year's earthquake and hun-dreds of thousands in permanent squalor.

Lineker, England's most potent scorer, can hardly expect to find the mercurial touch with which Rossi won the cup for Italy in Spain - and which has now deserted him — after the slog of a 60-match season. Were this the Olympics, any athlete would rate his chances slim after such previous competitive demands

Value of Shilton will be immense

England do, however, have an ace without equal in this field of 24 in Shilton, their goalkeeper. At 37, he is still worth a goal and possibly two against most other teams. His value is such that without him I doubt if England would progress past the second round. Even with him, an England team which has had doubts about too many positions, will have to play unexpectedly well to justify camp optimism. Without Bryan Robson, they have no other world-class player, although Hoddle has exceptional skill as yet internationally unfulfilled. Can Hoddle stand the heat, in every sense?

Anyone wishing to place a bet should look for teams that are settled in selection and formation, have at least four

As usual, disharmony exists between some managers and prominent players. Franz Beckenbauer is under fire by his men for saying last week that they cannot win the Cup: they grumbled, he re-tracted. But he has allegedly already made an appointment at home in Austria for the last week in June. Brazil are said by one of their most experi-enced officials to be in worse disarray than in any World Cup in memory. If they can beat Spain, they may bit by bit develop into a team, which they are not at the moment, around such talent as Casagrande, Muller and Silas, their young men. I think Spain will beat them with a team that has improved since losing the 1984 European Championship final. My money, or what is left of it after Mexican telecommunications have taken their toll, remains on Uruguay, compact, skilful and tactically disciplined. Whether they are temperamentally disciplined remains to be seen. It could be a fiery last match in the group with Scotland. Alex Ferguson's apparent move towards Archibald, a lastminute inclusion in the squad as replacement for Dalglish, as the attacking partner for Nicholas may have dismayed Scottish supporters, who dislike Archibald, but it will have improved Scotland's slim prospects. The Scots have not seen him at his best with Barcelona. I expect Denmark, however, to go through and become eventual runners-up: if they do not flag as they did in the European final. Molby, never mind his self-expressed fatigue, is thought to be likely to be on the bench because there is no room for both him and Lerby from Bayern Mu-

The World Cup is, inevitably, about winning, yet football should be, essentially, about glory: about gambling and taking chances and risking all. Because of the altitude and heat, defences in Mexican conditions, as was demonstrated in 1970, tend to disintegrate after about 70 minutes, creating open football. Let us hope that over the next month Francescoli, Laudrup, Platini, Butragueno, Sanchez. Valdano, Maradona, Lineker, Gomez, Nicholas, Voller,

England close to giant gamble

From Stuart Jones Football Correspondent Monterrey

Bobby Robson is on the verge of making one of the most important decisions of his career as England's manager. Tomorrow evening he is to state whether his captain and most influential player, Bryan Robson, will play in the opening World Cup tie here against Portugal two days

The question has dominated each of the daily conferences that have been held since his namesake damaged his hamstring in Colorado Springs some three weeks ago. Optimism has risen slowly and gradually but the elder Robson's latest estimation is that the younger is no more than 60 per cent fit.

"He is not up to full training yet," he said yesterday. "His technique is rusty, so we put him in with the other players. but he stayed out of harm's way. He is improving all the time but he has got to be doing more to expect to play in a tough World Cup match.

If Bryan Robson does prove to be fit enough, the benefit of seeing his name on the team sheets would be as highly encouraging for England as it would be deeply discouraging for the Portuguese. He is a giant of the modern game.

Yet, inevitably, there is a potential danger that either his troubled Achilles tendon or his weakened shoulder could give way again. Should the two bsons take a gamble and pick him for the first game, which is psychologically so crucial, and risk losing him for the less significant tie against Morocco:

It would be worth it if he could survive for an hour against the Portuguese (it would be unrealistic to expect him to be able to go the distance). If England win, he could then be rested until June 11, by which date qualification for the next round might already have been assured. Lineker also trained with a fibreglass cast that was as strong as a concrete pillar around his wrist. "He needs protection," Bobby Robson said, "but, if he wears that, the other players will need pro-tecting. We'll have to modify it, but he is now 85 per cent certain to be available for

Although Anderson, Bailey Barnes, and Steven missed the most lighthearted session so far through injury, all of them should have recovered in time, but one of them will be included in the starting lineup. England's main fear is that the sun will be burning at its bottest on Tuesday afternoon. They are hardly prepared for

For several days, it has been biding behind an endless blan-ket of grey clouds and the occasional burst of torrential rain. The weather, in other words, is more like an English summer than the predicted Mexican heatwave. It is still humid enough for the squad members to lose between four and six pounds in 90 minutes.

Ferguson is ready for battle

Los Angeles (PA) — Alex Ferguson sounded Scotland's battle cry yesterday as his squad prepared for their last serious action before the World Cup finals get under way. The Scotland manager looked ahead to the games against Denmark, West Germany and Urognay and said: "Anyone who underestimates us is making a serious mistake."

As Ferguson began to impose a more disciplined regime on his squad in Los Angeles, after the relaxed build-up in Santa Fe, he said: "I am convinced that we will not be out of place in our group in Mexico, no matter how tough

it is.
"I believe we are not far away from getting it right. I am convinced that we are three-quarters of the way there. The mental side is first class, the physical side is excellent and the attitude of the players towards the World Cup challenge is magnificent. The only unknown factor is the tactical side."

• GUADALAJARA (AP) -Northern Ireland officials breathed a sigh of relief after another injury scare threat-ened to upset their prepara-tions. Their full back, Jimmy Nicholl, injured his knee, but their manager, Billy Bingham, is confident he will be fit for the opening game on June 3 against Algeria here.

The forward, Norman Whiteside, has recovered from his strained Achilles tendon. There are still doubts concerning the other forward, Jimmy Quinn, but he is expected to be fit for selection.
